AND WATCHFUL CARE

Tillman Says Manning's Renomination Is Probable as Woodrow Wilson's.

The State.

Benjamin Ryan Tillman, senior United States senator from South Carolina, said yesterday that he believed the reelection of Gov. Richard I. Manning next Tuesday was as certain as the return of Woodrow Wilson to the presidency of the United States this fall. The threatened disaster, he said, had been brought about by a reckless disregard of duty on the part of a large proportion of the electorate, and the return of Gov. Manning to another term could be accomplished only by a thorough awakening of the people and strenuous activity by citizens in getting to the polls the 20,000 indifferent voters who remained away the first primary. "The Lord helps those who help themselves," was his cryptic appraisal of the value of industrious, personal effort during the second primary. His advice to all who favored good government was to go to the polls early, remain there all day and work for those who best represented the welfare of the State, and to stand by until the ballots were counted.

"Keep Primary Clean."

In anticipation of the charge of fraud, Mr. Tillman expressed the hope that all legal forms would be complied with, "that there may be no possible justification of a charge of unfairness or illegality. 'Whatever may happen,' he concluded, 'I should hate to see the integrity of the primary challenged. And no greater calamity could occur than for money to be used.'

Mr. Tillman is chairman of the committee on naval affairs in the United States senate and, upon the completion of the session's programme of legislation, two weeks ago, relative to the nation's military power on the high seas, returned to his home at Trenton, where he has been recuperating from his arduous labors in Washington and is now giving much attention to his farming interests. From his corn crop this year he says he will harvest extraordinary large yields and his cotton will produce an average crop.

Mr. Tillman fattens cattle each winter, and the only commercial fertilizer he used this year was acid phosphate. This in connection with the cow lot refuse is producing as good cotton this year, he says, as grown in previous years with 500 and 600 pounds of high grade guano to the acre. Mr. Tillman says he will harvest within the next few weeks enough silage from his peavine and sorghum acreage to fatten another herd of steers this winter. While in Columbia yesterday Mr. Tillman was the guest of his nephew, John E. Swearingen, State superintendent of education, on Blanding street.

Woodrow Wilson's Record.

National legislation, under the magnificent leadership of Woodrow Wilson during the last four years, Mr. Tillman regards as monumental. The decentralization of the money power, through the medium of the federal reserve act, stands out, he said, as the most constructive enactment of many decades, and the recently passed rural credits law, he says will prove a powerful factor in developing the agricultural resources of the nation, particularly in the States where the Torrens system or some other efficient land registration act has been passed. In summarizing his statements relative to both national and State politics Mr. Tillman said:

"I believe Woodrow Wilson will be reelected president of the United States, just as I believe Mr. Manning will be reelected governor of South Carolina. I don't think the good Lord has any ill will toward the people of this State. He is only chastening them by threatened disaster, and is making them alive to their duties of citizenship. The election will be carried by personal activity on the part of the voters, and 'the Lord helps those who help themselves.' The man who wants good government should go to the polls early next Tuesday, stay there all day and work for the interests of the State and not go home until he sees the ballots counted. I sincerely hope that all legal forms will be complied with, that there may be no possible justification of a charge of unfairness or illegality. Whatever may happen, I should hate to see the integrity of the primary challenged. And no greater calamity could occur than for money to be used."

LEAPS IN THE DARK.

Why the Broncho Jumped in His Wild Race at Midnight.

A former herdsman relates a thrilling personal experience connected with a stampede of cattle. He was taking a herd of 400 steers to Leadville and had camped for the night on Bear river, near its junction with the Little Snake. At midnight, when he went on guard all was quiet, but in an hour or so, for some unexplained reason, the cattle were up and off like a flash. Something had stampeded them.

He was riding an old blue colored line backed California broncho, just the beast for the work. He had often ridden him a hundred miles a day. The night was dark and cloudy, and he had to rely on the animal's sure footedness as he strove to stay on the flanks of the steers and turn them until their scare should cease.

It was a wild race. Four or five times the broncho gave tremendous jumps, but landed right and went on in good shape. In the course of an hour or so the man had the beavers quieted.

When daylight came, being curious to learn what obstacles had occasioned those tremendous jumps of the broncho, the man set forth to look over the ground. Leaving the bottom land, the steers had ascended a gentle acclivity, and on the plateau at the top he had kept circling them.

The plateau was intersected by a canyon about four miles long and from 1,500 to 2,000 feet deep. Its walls inclined toward each other at the top, and the distance across was fifteen or twenty feet.

During the chase the broncho had jumped that frightful chasm four times. His hoof marks were plainly visible, and down in the debris, hundreds of feet below, were a dozen mangled steers that had been crowded off.—Los Angeles Times.

WHALING DAYS ARE OVER.

A Once Thriving Industry That Has Nearly Vanished.

At the outbreak of the American Revolution and for a period of seventy-five years following the conclusion of that struggle whaling was the most important branch of the American fisheries. From 500 to 700 vessels sought whales in all the oceans and seas of the world, and in one year New Bedford alone sent out 300 vessels, whose cargoes of bone and oil were the basis of the industrial life of the city.

The pursuit of sperm whales reached its climax in 1837, when oil valued at nearly $4,500,000 was brought in, mostly from the south Pacific. The height of the industry was in 1846, when 70,000 persons derived their support from whales and 720 vessels, valued at $21,000,000, were engaged.

For more than fifty years the fishery has been declining, and in numerous ports that once derived most of their wealth from the industry there have for a long time existed only memories of former greatness. For a number of years the sperm, right and bow head whales that supported the fishery in early years have been very scarce and their pursuit has been unprofitable, and the present importance of the whale fishery, amounting in value to less than 2 per cent of the American fisheries, depends on the taking from shore stations of species of whales that formerly were for the most part neglected.

The glory of the whale fishery has departed forever, and the commercial if not the biological extinction of all kinds of whales is proceeding rapidly, undeterred and unhampered by the principal maritime powers.—Hugh M. Smith in National Geographic Magazine.

CURIOUS BRIDGES.

One in Switzerland That Is Famed For Its Roof Paintings.

Probably no town in the world has such strange bridges as Srinagar, the capital of Kashmir, in India. The city is built on the banks of the river Jhelum, which is crossed by many wooden bridges lined with old and dilapidated shops and houses with balconies and lattice windows. Some of these are very insecure and look as if they might at any time fall into the river beneath.

Timber has always been largely used for building bridges, and the earliest one of this kind on record is that which Julius Caesar made across the Rhine and which he describes in his "Commentaries."

The roofed Kapellbrücke at Lucerne is one of the most interesting. It crosses the river Reuss diagonally and has 112 triangular paintings beneath the roof, recording the heroic deeds of old Switzers and the sufferings of their patron saints. In the midst of the Kapellbrücke stands an octagonal tower, which formed part of the fortifications of the town in the thirteenth century. The bridge was built in 1333.

One of the curious and ancient bridges in Europe is that at Croyland, in Lincolnshire, England, which is supposed to date from the ninth century. No road now passes over and no water under it. It consists of three pointed arches, which meet in the center, and the ascent is so steep that only foot passengers can go over it. Upon the bridge is a seated figure in stone of a rebel Saxon king.—Pearson's.

MUSIC'S UNIQUE QUALITY.

Wherein It Differs From Sculpture, Poetry and Painting.

Music finds its perfection in itself without relation to other objects. It is what it is in itself alone. It is non-definitive; it does not use symbols of something else; it cannot be translated into other terms.

The poet seeks always a complete union of the thing said and the method of saying it. Flaubert seeks patiently and persistently for the one word which shall not only be the exact symbol of his thought, but which shall fit his euphony.

The painter so draws his objects, so distributes his colors and so arranges his composition as to make of them plastic mediums for the expression of his thought, and the greatness of his picture depends first of all and inevitably on his power of fusing his subjects with his technique.

In sculpture precisely the same process takes place. Neither of these arts actually copies nature. Each "arranges" it for its own purpose.

In music this much sought union of matter and manner is complete. The thing said and the method of saying it are one and indivisible. It is, as Pater says, "the ideal of all art whatever, precisely because in music it is impossible to distinguish the form from the substance or matter, the subject from the expression."—Atlantic.

Boorish and Urbane.

When we speak of a person as "boorish" we mean that he is rude, ill bred and uncouth. We seldom stop to think that the word originally meant nothing more than "rustic." Boor is the same word as the German "bauer," and the Dutch "boer," signifying "a farmer." The manners of the peasantry are alluded to in an uncompromising way by the history of this and many other words in the language. "Heathen" and "pagan" meant simply "country bred" and "village bred" once upon a time. Culture and the higher civilized virtues were thought of as originating in towns and making their way slowly, if at all, to the rural districts. So we have as an antonym to "boorish" the word "urbane"—which originally meant "city-fied."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Vicious Dwarf.

Bebe was the favorite dwarf of the former King Stanislas of Poland. Born in 1741 in Lorraine, at the age of five he was twenty-two inches high and at his death in 1764 thirty-three inches. He was neither physically nor mentally active. Once Count Borowski visited him, and he became so jealous of the former's superior manners and intellectual qualities that he attempted to throw his visitor into the fire, but was prevented by the household.

A Disappointing Trip.

"I hear that you were invited to take a four day automobile tour with Mr. and Mrs. Whitby."

"Yes."

"How did you enjoy it?"

"Oh, I didn't care much for it. Mrs. Whitby was so enthusiastic over the scenery and things that she never told me a thing about any of our friends that I hadn't heard before."—Albany Knickerbocker Press.

Keeping Posted.

"I see Blinks always carries a volume of the encyclopedia with him to read on the train instead of a newspaper."

"Yes. You know he has three small children at home, and he makes it a point to try to answer all the questions they ask him."—New York World.

"Mercy, yes. Why, that woman would insist on dressing up to entertain an idea."—Boston Transcript.

Sanitary Soda Water

No beverage in the world is more wholesome or more deliciously refreshing than bottled Soda Water if that Soda Water is pure and the bottle clean.

Pure Soda Water means a beverage consisting of pure water, pure carbonic gas, pure sugar and pure, wholesome flavoring extracts.

Pure water is our first consideration. Every drop of water that goes into our goods is put through a process of thorough filtration.

These preparations alone make it safe to drink our bottled beverages no matter what may happen to taint or pollute the general water supply.

But there is another safeguard. The fact that carbonic gas is a powerful germicide is just being discovered by health departments of various cities, and as a consequence, they are advising the public in times of doubtful purity of the public water supply to buy their water in carbonated form either flavored or plain.

Various tests have shown that water highly polluted with bacteria is rendered almost absolutely germless by the process of carbonation.

Bottles Must Be Clean

Granting that carbonation does purify water, that is no excuse for any Bottler putting up his goods in bottles that are not absolutely clean. The proper cleansing of bottles cost money and that is why many of the old line Bottlers are satisfied to go along with the old process of sousing their bottles in a tub of water and trying to clean them out with hand brushes.

This is not our way. Every bottle that leaves our plant is first cleansed in caustic solution, then in clean water, then rinsed in cold, clean water. Seven or eight gallons of water are forced into and out of every bottle during this cleansing process.

Dealers in Soda Water are sometimes careless as to the quality and purity of the goods they sell. They are very apt to place their business with the Bottler who will quote them the lowest price, so they can make the largest profit for themselves, as they charge the public the same price as other dealers charge the public on first class, clean, pure, sanitary goods. The public's greatest safeguard is to investigate the sanitary condition of the various Soda Water manufacturing establishments in their community and to refuse to buy goods of any shops that do not measure up to the highest standard.
