S. A. RIGBY. Do our readers remember reading in these columns anything from Samuel A. Rigby, the jolly merchant on the corner? Well, he is with us again this fall and this time back to my mother in the old countries has promised to stay. He has one of the best equipped establishments in town and a corps of handsome and polite clerks as you will find anywhere in the State. There is little Mitch, whose smile is as beaming as the noonday sun, and there is Bill ing as the noonday sun, and there is Bill Trescott, whose head is as level as a dice and as slick as a ribbon. Venning is a splendid fellow and no man in the country has a flatter-footed understanding than he Cutino, a captivating young gentleman holds down a part of the store with an anx holds down a part of the store with an anxious look in his eyes for his country friends. Horton Rigby, he is a son of the old man, and when he peeps over the railing on his desk, it is business up to the hilt with old man Sam behind him holding the hit. Mell; Rigby's store is not a skating rink nor is it an ice cream garden, but it is a first-class up to-date general merchandise first-class up-to-date general merchandise store, where everything you want is kept and if by accident he happens to be out of an article it will be gotten for you as quick as steam and electricity can bring it. Rigby sells everything to everybody and everybody's money to him is as good as everybody else's. Mr. Rigby is a merchant who has made a grand success of his basis. who has made a grand success of his busi-ressand he did not do it by sitting on a stump and wait for somebody else to drop success into his mouth, if he had, he would have been sitting there yet, if the pressure did not move him and the stamp did not complain. When you come to town go to see Rigby and he will show you the sights in Hogan's Alley.

MOSES LEVI.

Another example of thrift and energy is the old land mark Moses Levi. He has spent a life in the mercantile business and his name has gone forth over the entire country as a successful business man. Did his success come to him by keeping his goods stuck away back into his shelves so that no one knew of their existance until they accidentally dropped into his store or was it by the remarkable push, pluck and perseverance displayed by kim. Mr. Levi wants people to know that he sells goods of all kinds and he regards his county paper the best medium in which to give the people the information. You never see any checker playing about his store, but you do see a crowd of experienced salesmen busy from morning until night measuring, weighing and seiling from his immensely assorted stock of everything a man, woman, or child can use. Does he sell cheap? go to his store and see the class of people making large bills, that will tell the story more than human tongue. Go into his lot and see the sun burnt faces of the honest farmers unloading the bales of the honest farmers unloading the bales of cotton and without a question it tells a story to interest every man who has a bale of cotton sell. Moses Levi may not be as young in body as he was forty years ago, but the vigor of his former days is with him yet, when it comes to a business trans-action and the young man undertaking to cope with him, will feel pains in the back while the old man is smilingly moving the pea on a six hundred pound bale of cotton.
