and charged him with unfairness and with a breach of journalistic proprieties. At the conclusion of General Norton's speech the editor made a reply in which he explained the reason of his refusal to permit General Norton to publish a communication involving Mr. Ellerbe. He undertook to show that had he allowed Norton to publish his communication it would have been unfair to Mr. Elerbe. it would have been unfair to Mr. Ellerbe for the reason that Mr. Ellerbe

The idea is that fewer notes being the rate of discount is simply charging more for money loaned, and the effect is to shut off loans, thus contracting the true chiefs were.

Mr. Evans concluded with his tariff argument.

Col. Irby said he was delighted to be present, for he wanted to see "My Darling present, for he wanted to see "My Darling Appelt," whom he had not seen since he appell, "whom he had not seen since he appell," whom he had not seen since he appell, "whom he had not seen since he appell." so, for he made no intimation that Tillman was trying to defeat him until the very last meeting, and that at Fiorence, one of the strongest Conservative towns is the State. Some think it was a shrewd play upon the part of the defunct politician, but in our judgment, the trick was too transparent to fool many people. Irby does not hate Ben Tillman any more now than he did before the campaign started, and he loves Evans with the same affection.
