Such clashing of buckets! Such hooking of horns! Such kicking of hoofs! Such vehemence in a language I fortunate ly could not understand! Now the their woolly backs were at the trough and now the sheep of another mark. It was one of the most exciting scenes I ever witnessed. An old book describes one of these contentions at an eastern well when it says: "One day day. the poor men, the widows and the orchans met together and were driving their camels and their flocks to drink and were all standing by the water-side. Daji came up and stopped them all and took possession of the water for his master's cattle. Just then an old woman belonging to the tribe of good, Master Daji, as to let my cattle drink. They are all the property I possess, and I live by their milk. Pity my flock; have compassion on me. Grant my request and let them drink." Then came another old woman and addressed him: 'Oh, Master Daji, I am a poor, weak old woman, as you see. Time has dealt hardly with me. It has aimed its arrows at me, and its daily and nightly calamities have destroyed all my men. I have lost my children and my husband, and since then I have been in great distress. These are all that I possess. Let them crink, for I live on the milk that they produce. Pity my forlorn state. have no one to tend them. Therefore grant my supplication and of thy kindness let them drink.' But in this case the brutal slave, so far from granting this humble request, smots the woman to the ground. Zipporah became the bride of Moses. one of the mightiest men of all the centuries. Zipporah little thought that that morning as she helped drive her father's flocks to the well she was splendidly deciding her own destiny. Had she staid in the house while the other six daughters of the sheik tended to their herds her life would probably have been a tame and un eventful life in the solitudes. But her industry, her fidelity to her father's interest, her spirit of helpfulness, brought her into league with one of the grandest characters of all history. They met at that samous well, and while she admired the courage of Moses he admired the filial behavior of Zipporah.
