The fact is, unlike Mario, she was quite an empty headed person, with no pursuits or interests apart from the stage or any power of occupying herself. Grisi came back to the concert room when far too lame to attempt the stage. I heard her sing at the Crystal Palace somewhere in the sixties. She was born in 1812 and died in 1869. She imprudently tried "Casta Diva," her great song in "Norma," but reached her high will be out of my office attending to roads notes with a painful effort. They fancied they still heard the goddess of the stage when Rubini, Tagliafico, Mario and Lablache had lifted the Notary Public and Italian school under Rossini, Bellini, Donizetti and Verdi to the highest pitch of intoxicating popularity, but to my taste poor Grisi's "Casta Diva" was a piteous exhibition. - Contemporary
