A WOMAN'S LOVE.

A sentinel angel sitting high in glory
Read this small will ring out from purgatory:
"Have mercy, mighty angel; hear my story!
"I loved, and, blind with passionate love, I fell,
For God is just, and death is death to hell.
For God is just, and death is death to hell."
"Do not rage against his high decree
Nor for myself do ask that grace shall be,
But for my love on earth who mourns for me,
To pay a thousand years of fire and pain."
"Great Spirit, let me see my love again
And comfort him one hour, and I will faint
To pay a thousand years of fire and pain."
Then said the pitying angel: "Nay! Repent
That thou wilt! Look! The diabolical bent
Down to the last hour of thy punishment!"
But still she wailed: "I pray thee, let me go!
I cannot rest to peace and leave him so,
Oh, let me soothe him in his bitter woe!"
The brazen gates ground suddenly ajar,
And upward, joyful, like a rising star,
She rose and vanished in the ether far.
But soon adown the dying sunset sailing,
And like a wounded bird her pinions trailing,
She fluttered back, with broken hearted wailing.
She sobbed: "I found him by the summer sea,
Reclined, his head upon a maiden's knee.
She curled his hair and kissed him. 'Woe is me!'"
She wept: "Now let my punishment begin!
I have been fond and foolish. Let me in
To expiate my sorrow and my sin."
The angel answered: "Nay, sad soul; go higher!
To be deceived in your true heart's desire
Was bitter than a thousand years of fire."

DYNAMITE AND MINERS.

Long Immunity From Accident Results in Content of Danger.

"After a miner had handled dynamite for eight or ten years without a serious mishap it is a good idea to put him to doing something else about the works," said a gentleman of this city who has had a great deal of experience with high explosives. "The chances are a hundred to one that his long immunity from accident has given him such a contempt for danger that he is an unconscious menace to everybody on the premises. He will do things that not only imperil his own life, but the lives of all his comrades. To give you an illustration, once I had an old Cornishman at work at a mine in which I was interested and had intrusted him with a general supervision of all the blasting. He had been handling dynamite for twenty years or more and was justly regarded as an expert. During that entire period he had never had an accident worth speaking of, and by degrees the care and vigilance that were responsible for his excellent record had worn away until he was beginning to entertain the delusion, common to old hands, that the danger of the stuff was very much exaggerated. "One day I was passing through a cut where some blasting had been going on and noticed the old Cornishman hammering a drill into what seemed to be a boring in the rock. I asked him why he was doing it, and he told me coolly there was a cartridge in the hole that had failed to explode and he was 'just knocking out the tamper' to reprim it. I was horrified, for at every blow he was liable to explode the dynamite, and I ordered him sternly to stop and never repeat such a performance. The proper method would have been to have drilled a new hole near by and exploded the first charge with a second blast. He obeyed sullenly, grumbling to himself, and less than a month afterward was blown up while doing exactly the same thing. He lost his left arm at the shoulder, his left eye and part of his left ear. He also lost his contempt for dynamite, and when he finally emerged from the hospital I gave him a back his former job. I never had a more scrupulously careful employee than he was from that time on. It seems a brutal thing to say, but there is nothing that does an old dynamite hand as much good as to get blown up once or twice."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

The Proofreader.

An anonymous writer in the American Printer of New York says: "The ideal proofreader for a small printshop ought to be an accomplished printer, a sensible person, a person understanding the scope and limitations of the English language, one comprehending the true offices of punctuation, one with a keen and true appreciation of literature, a storehouse of exact knowledge, a perfect grammarian, a perfect speller and with a fund of humor sufficient to enable him to do his whole duty along these various lines without making for an early grave. If he does not really know everything, he ought assuredly to be able to scent out an error and to know how to get at the truth. If he reads the proofs for a weekly newspaper also, he ought to know all about local affairs and to be about the town in order to prevent the reported marriage of the girl who merely acted as bridesmaid and untangle the mixed topography of the reporters' articles."

Henry Ward Beecher's Wit.

On one occasion Mr. Beecher was in the midst of an impassioned speech some one attempted to interrupt him by suddenly crowing like a cock. The orator, however, was equal to the occasion. He stopped, listened to the crowing, pulled out his watch. "Morning already!" he said. "My watch is only at 10. But there can be no mistake about it. The instincts of the lower animals are infallible."
"There was a roar of laughter. The 'lower animals' in the gallery collapsed, and Mr. Beecher was able to resume as if nothing had occurred."

Parental Economy.

"Papa," said Dicky, "all the other boys are going to have torpedoes or firecrackers or something for the Fourth of July. Can't I have anything at all?"
"Dicky," said Mr. Stinjer, becoming mysteriously, "come with me, and I'll show you something."
He took him out to the summer kitchen and showed him a large package, neatly folded and tied with a string.
"There," he said, "are all the paper bags that have been brought into the house for a whole year from grocery stores and other places. I have had your mother save them for you. Every one of them will make as much noise as a firecracker if you fill it with air and pop it right."
It was not exactly what Dicky had set his heart on, but it was all the Fourth of July he got.—Youth's Companion.

Willing to Take Chances.

"So you're going to marry Mike?" said the mistress inquiringly.
"Yes, mum."
"Are you sure you are not making a mistake?"
"Well," returned the cook thoughtfully, "he's not the best man in the world, but I'm sure, but if I love him so good, I'll be sure of getting another one. I've been thinkin' about it, and it looks to me like it's right an' proper to take what yer kin get when yer kin get it. Them that holds off for the big prize has been known to lose the little wans. I think I'll take Mike."—Chicago Post.

LATIMER AND THE ENQUIRER.

The Congressman Admits Some Charges and Denies Some—The Enquirer Replies.

The Enquirer is in receipt of another letter from Mr. Asbury C. Latimer, Representative in Congress from the Third district, and candidate for a seat in the United States Senate. This letter is in reply to the information that was published for the benefit of Mr. Latimer in our issue of October 9. We expected an answer sooner, but presume that the delay was occasioned by Mr. Latimer's having hastened to Washington in the hope of being of assistance to the President in the distribution of Federal patronage. However, here is Mr. Latimer's letter as received, spelling, punctuation and phraseology being reproduced without change:
Belton, S. C., Oct. 14, 1901.
Editor The Yorkville Enquirer:
I find in my mail to day your paper in which is contained an article headed, "Information for Mr. Latimer." You quote from certain letters from Dr. J. Wm. Stokes, statements with regard to me not true. I have a right to believe him a true friend of mine. I through personal effort saved his seat in Congress at a critical time when it was contested, and never did him any harm during his life. He is now dead, and I presume left this record behind, however; protesting in the same letter against appearing in the role of informant. You are so anxious to defend your unwarranted attack on me at the time that you put in print this dagger thrust at me in secrecy, and now covered by the shadows of death. I never claimed anywhere or at any time that I was the author of Free Rural delivery. Neither was Dr. Stokes the author. It is in his reference to "the use of title," he means to claim the authorship of F. I. Delivery, nothing could be more absurd; the Congressional Record, and every member of Congress who knows anything about the subject, has been on the record in that regard. Several appropriations had been made to the service, and it had been in operation several years before I went to Congress. But I care nothing for his claim on that line. I deny that I ever offered a free pass. I did solicit a party of members of Congress and Senators to visit Due West when Bryan spoke and to visit this State and Cuba. We hired a Pullman car at so much per day, the different roads pulled the car free of charge. My object was pleasant and by no means selfish. I did not contact with our people. I invited Dr. Stokes with the other members of the S. C. Delegation to join us. For this I have no apology to offer, and will do it as often as opportunity offers, and I believe accomplished. See Wilson's visit to my home and suggested that he would like to experiment in this section with clovers and grasses, and proposed if I would furnish the land he would make an experiment. I agreed not only to furnish the land, but to bear expenses. He would furnish the seed and expert to do the work. This was done, and for this I have no apology to make. He has made many experiments of a similar character in other States.
A. C. LATIMER.
It is true, as Mr. Latimer says, that Dr. Stokes is dead; but it is equally true that he was not dead when the letters were written. We have always considered the doctor as a man of exceptional integrity, who would not utter a verbal falsehood, and the idea that he would be so silly as to commit a falsehood to writing over his signature is absurd, in our opinion. We observe the complaint that Mr. Latimer makes about our "putting in print this dagger thrust at me in secrecy, and now covered by the shadows of death," but we are unable to see what that has to do with the fact whether or not Mr. Latimer offered Dr. Stokes a free pass.
Upon reference to Dr. Stokes' published letter it will be observed that Dr. Stokes said of Mr. Latimer: "He also had sent me an annual pass over one of the great trunk lines, which I returned." Mr. Latimer, it will be observed, says of Dr. Stokes: "I deny that I ever offered him a free pass." Technically there is no issue of veracity here; but if Mr. Latimer had a free pass sent to Dr. Stokes, then the doctor's charge holds good. In the absence of a more specific statement from Mr. Latimer, the reader will draw his own conclusion.
We have never understood Dr. Stokes to claim credit for the authorship of the free rural deliveries. We have all along understood, however, that he was responsible for the arrangement that secured free delivery along star routes in South Carolina. Individuals who attended the Thirteenth meeting of August 3, 1900, represented to us that in his speech Mr. Latimer attempted to claim credit for this, and a note of the fact was made in our issue of August 4. Referring to this in his letter of August 21, 1900, Dr. Stokes said:
"I note that you use in your criticism the term 'Star Route.' I do not know that he has ever laid claim to that specific phrase of the delivery, but there is much confusion in the public mind, and his claims have been so couched as to leave the impression that he is responsible for rural delivery. He would probably get from under your strictures on the verbal inaccuracy of the indictment. Better use the generic term, rural delivery in any future references."
We observe that while the free

McLaurin and the Cabinet.

"The rumor in Washington that Senator McLaurin will likely join President Roosevelt's cabinet probably is the result of the opinion of the Senator has attached in the scheme of the President's new Southern policy, and there may be nothing substantial in it. At the same time, it is not a fantastic proposition by any means, and certainly not without the bounds of possibility. Should it come to pass, of course, Senator McLaurin would leave the Democratic party and Tillman and his allies would be spared the dangerous undertaking of throwing him out, and the impossible task of stilling his arguments."—Charleston Post.

Senator McLaurin may be invited to join the Roosevelt cabinet and he may decide to accept the position for the benefit which he may be able to confer upon the south, but our Charleston contemporary is entirely mistaken in saying, "Should it come to pass, of course, Senator McLaurin would leave the Democratic party, etc." In the first place if President Roosevelt should extend such an invitation to Senator McLaurin it would be as a distinct compliment to the South, which is solidly Democratic and will always remain so. He will be requested to join the cabinet, if at all, as a Democrat, representing the progressive, broad, up-to-date views of the Commercial Democracy as opposed to the antiquated, anarchical, revolutionary tendencies of Bryanism and Tillmanism. Senator McLaurin will not be asked to change his party, nor would he accept a position in Mr. Roosevelt's cabinet upon any such condition. Nor will his acceptance of such a position as a Democrat be without ample precedent. Judge Key, a Democrat, was a member of President Hayes' cabinet. Mr. Gresham was a Republican member of Mr. Cleveland's cabinet. The cabinet officers are the President's advisors, touching the several branches of the government. President Roosevelt has indicated unmistakably that he intends to carry out President McKinley's Southern policy, the key note of which was the perfect reconciliation of the two sections, by a non-partisan, equitable distribution of the federal offices in the South.

It seems to be impossible for the Southern press and more especially a large number of the newspapers of South Carolina to realize that a Republican President can truly be in earnest when he announces his intention of appointing the best men to office irrespective of party. It is not unnatural, with the experience of a long line of Republican party Presidents before us, that we should be a trifle incredulous when fair play and proper recognition of our peculiar political condition is promised. But we believe that with the McKinley administration an entirely new era opened for the South and that it only remains for the Southern people to throw off the narrowminded prejudices of the past and accept the proffered hand of friendship in good faith. We are not asked to surrender either personal or party principles. We are simply invited to join in obliterating sectional lines and in harmoniously working towards the common prosperity of our country.

We believe that President Roosevelt is moved by neither selfish nor partisan motives when he appoints Democrats to federal offices in Alabama and South Carolina as he has recently done; and we believe that if he should tender Senator McLaurin a cabinet position it would be simply that he is convinced that in McLaurin he would find a Southern Democrat, best qualified by his broad, liberal views to aid him as a member of his advisory board in solving the Southern problem, by methods entirely outside of party lines.—Green-ville News.

Another View.

"What's bred in the bone will come out in the flesh," is a good old proverb which is illustrated many times over in daily life. President Roosevelt possesses an inherent desire to openly defy public opinion, but if he does not exercise some control over those desires public opinion will not only defy them, but will strenuously condemn the reckless Teddy. By entertaining Booker T. Washington at dinner at the White House the other day, President Roosevelt committed an act of indiscretion that will bring down upon his head a fearful tirade of abuse and adversely affect his chances for reelection. It was eminently proper that he should receive Washington as the representative of the colored race in religious, educational and political affairs, but when he entertained him at dinner he was neither performing the duties of the President of a white Republic nor setting an example worthy of emulation by those over whom he exercises executive authority. The only reason we can assign for the indiscretion is that the President's inherent desire to rebel against public opinion over-mastered his better judgment. No sane person who exercises authority over seventy millions of people does anything impulsively, no matter how trivial it may be, and as Mr. Roosevelt is a man of sound, common sense, it is to be presumed that he gave the matter some forethought, which proves conclusively that his innate desires will always show a tendency to prevail in deliberations affecting the nation and its affairs. Whether we are fortunate or unfortunate in having such a President is a debatable question. If fortunate the expense of retaining a cabinet is unnecessary and its dissolution should speedily follow, while the reassembling of Congress would be an expensive and useless hardship. A pliant will be feared by everyone, but an unbending will—one which will not yield to reason—is to be greatly dreaded, most especially when it is possessed by one who is expected to protect the lives and property of seventy six million people. But let us hope that the new President will realize the full importance of the responsibilities attached to his great office and in the future will allow reason instead of innate desires to prevail in the consideration and accomplishment of all his public as well as private acts.—Dillon Herald.

It Happened in a Drug Store.

"One day last winter a lady came to my drug store and asked for a brand of cough medicine. I told her to have in stock," says Mr. B. B. Grandin, the popular druggist of Ontario, N. C. "She was disappointed and wanted to know why. I told her that I could not recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and that I would give her a bottle of the remedy and after giving it a fair trial if she did not find it worth the price paid, she would be free to return the bottle. In the course of a day or two the lady came back in company with a little child, a cough medicine, and she said to buy a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I told her that it was a very good remedy for the child, and she bought it for the child. It is for sale by The R. B. Loryea Drug Store."

EXPOSITION.

President Roosevelt will be invited to the Charleston exposition. Just when the invitation will be extended is not known, as the directors of the company have not yet decided what day will be best suited to have the President visit the exposition. It is certain, however, that the invitation which will be extended to the President will not ask him to visit Charleston and the exposition before the holidays. It is probable that he will be asked to come either in January or February. Should President Roosevelt accept the invitation, he will be given a warm reception upon his arrival. A special day will be fixed for the President to visit the grounds and an attractive program will be arranged. There will be speakers and music in the Auditorium. President Roosevelt will address the vast audience that will be assembled for the occasion.

There will be many distinguished citizens who will be invited to attend the exposition, not only prominent citizens of

INSTALLATION OF EXHIBITS.

Exhibits will begin to arrive by November 10, and the contractors are hurrying through with the work so as to have the buildings ready for the exhibits. All of the buildings will not be completed by that date, though a number of them will be, and the exhibits will be installed as fast as they arrive.

MIDWAY ATTRACTIONS.

The attractions for the midway will begin to arrive next month. Already work is under way for some of the attractions. The midway will present a busy scene by November 15.

LIVE STOCK EXHIBIT.

The exposition company offers a splendid opportunity to breeders of live stock. Large premiums will be offered and all breeds will be recognized. The manager of the livestock department, Mr. G. F. Weston, is arranging for a horse show upon the fashionable and popular lines as similar events held annually in Madison Square Garden, New York city. It is hoped thus to bring prominently before the public the best thoroughbreds, including trotting, running, driving and coach horses. Many fine turnouts are expected.
