General results this year prove the superiority of home fertilizers, such as cotton seed, stable and litter composts to the commercial guanos, like 21 and 3 per cent ammoniated guanos, and cotton seed meal, as far as available soluble nitrogen is concerned.

It is gratifying to note that cotton seed is not being sold, or exchanged for meal and other commercial fertilizers, but is being kept on the farms where they have been proven to be such an indispensable adjunct to the best production of crops, and at the same time of great valce to the permanent improvement of the soil, notwithstanding the advisory advertisement of the cotton oil interests (of late seen in the county papers) to the contrary. ### A Cottontot's Complaint.

To the Editor of The News & Courier: In common with hundreds of cottontots, whose fields are white for the harvest. I protest against the selfish greed of those railroad corporations that organize at this season annually big negro excursions to the various cities. These excursions each carry over five hundred greatly needed cot-ton-pickers from our fields, whose labor is lost for three days: for they are so excited and enthusiastic over the anticipated trip that the day previous is consumed in discussing it, and planning ways and means of getting to the depot, and they straggle in the day after about midday from the various from a debauch and the women fagged

There is nothing so demoralizing to the negroes as these excursions, and their own Bishops have denounced them in the pulpit and press.

We would not debar our brothers in of the entire field of cotton-pickers.

This is no local "kick." It voices the indignation of every cotton planter except to the local buyers who use this not leave it a field, subject to equinoctial devastation and storms.

If the roads are going to persist in getting up junketing trips for our laborers during harvest, causing a loss of their services for three days conseto tell us so in time to prevent our mak ing arrangements to trouble them with so much fertilizers and cotton in future.
