THE ROBIN SLAUGHTER. From reports which have appeared ecently in the daily papers the slaugher of the robins continues without abatement in the south, especially in portions of Tennessee. It seems that in the eastern portion of Rutherford county, in that state, the robins shortly before their migration north congregate by the thousand in the cedar groves, and it has become a custom to form large parties for the purpose of capturing them. In one night one of these parties made the record catch of 2,637 redbreasts, while it is estimated that 150,000 were captured on these roosting grounds alone in the three weeks preceding the one night's catch referred to. The plan followed in the capture of the birds is to have catchers stationed in the cedars, while others drive the birds to them. Those stationed in the trees are provided with bags, into which the birds are thrust when caught, one person sometimes bagging as high as 325 birds in a single night. And this wanton slaughter of these beautiful and useful birds is prosecuted for the munificent reward of 10 cents a dozen, which the dead birds fetch on the local markets. This case but emphasizes the need of carry rying out a suggestion made in these notes some months ago that those interested in the effective protection of bird life should lend their combined influence to secure the enactment of a federal law which will exempt from such wanton slaughter all useful migratory or interstate birds. A letter of inquiry sent by the writer to the chief of the biological survey at Washington elicited the information that up to that time no legislation of this character had been presented or even given serious consideration. It would seem high time that some such action was

It is a pretty good idea to carry the war on files into their own territorynamely, out of doors. A big step along this line may be made by putting the accumulations of horse manure in the stable in some screened bin where the files cannot have access to it, as this is of this breed of dairy cattle. A CORRECTION.

In a late installment of these notes a paragraph on the pear blight recordmended kerosene as a suitable distofectant for tools used in removing blight infected portions of pear and apple trees. This was given on what was supposed to be good authority, but a series of articles put in print within a few days by Professor P. J. O'Gara. pear blight specialist of the department of agriculture and stationed for the past three years in the Rogue river volley, states that no disinfectant should be used but corrosive sublimate -mescaric chloride-which is a deadly poison when taken internally, but has no ill effect on cuts or bruises on the hands. He recommends that a solution as strong as 1-1000 should be used, made by dissolving three tablets in grease and cottonseed oil on a hungry four ounces or half a pint of water. A small sponge kept moistened with the solution is the most convenient means of applying it to the tools to be disinfected. It is important to disinfect the pruning tools after each operation, as well as the wound in twig or limb.

WIND AND GASOLINE POWER. The chief drawback with the wordthe fact that too often when power is most needed it is likely to go on a strike for lack of a breeze to stir it. While the gasoline engine has tantrums now and then, yet if worth anything to start with and handled discreetly it can usually be counted on to do business when needed, while it furnishes enough power to do many jobs too heavy for a windmill to handie. Growers of sweet peas in a good many sections had this favorite source of fragrant bloom well nigh ruined last season by the green aphides, or plant lice. These are sucking and not biting insects, and hence the ordinary poisons do not reach them. They must be killed by contact with some spray. and for this nothing is better than a solution made by steeping tobacco leaves or stems in warm water. This may be applied to the vines with an effective hand sprayer. If one treatment does not kill all of the lice, a coud application should be given.

Inspections made at the different packing and slaughter houses of the country show that fully 2 per cent of all hogs killed are affected with tuberculosis. An interesting fact in connec tion with this state of affairs is that the outward and seemingly thrifty appearance of an animal is no guarantee whatever that it is free from disease Investigations into the causes of the disease in hogs show the most frequent causes of infection to be the feeding on buttermilk from creamer ies, eating milk from tuberculous cows and feeding behind cattle affected with

He has also recommended to congress that a law be passed which will permit of the mining of this rock phosphate, but only on the condition that none of it be exported. Inasmuch as half of the phosphate mixed in this country last year was exported, here would seem to be a phase of the conservation of resources movement that congressmen might well give their aid to.

The butter fat and oleo fellows have been having it out before a congressional investigating committee at Washington the past few weeks, and at the time of writing it is uncertain what the outcome of the hearing will be. The controversy has been precipitated anew because the eleo fellowsreally the packing trust-want the tax on colored oleo removed so that they can realize a still larger profit by selling it under the guise of butter. The butter men contend, and rightly, that this is, in reality an attempt to get money under false pretenses and in so far works an injustice to their business. The law in force governing the sale of oleomargerine levies a tax of 10 cents a pound on oleo colcred te imitate butter, while the tax on the uncent per pound, the consumer being allowed to color the oleo after purchase to suit his own taste. While the high price of food products is a live one, it is hardly so live as to justify the passage of a law which will enable the packing trust to palm off beef public for what they are really not.
