The Old and the New.
"I am the spirit of Captain Kidd," said a voice at the scene.
"But you seem to be weeping," observed the medium.
"I am. Whenever I come back to earth I grieve over the time I wasted fighting out actual expeditions, when I could have opened up an office and sold stock to people who wanted to get rich quick."—Washington Star.

Why He Went on the Bench.
At a dinner given by a chapter of Masons one of the leading speakers of the evening was introduced with special emphasis on the fact that he was a judge, also that he was a baseball fan and had been at one time an enthusiastic member of an amateur team. The judge received his introduction with eagerness and responded: "In our great national game if a striker misses a ball he gets a seat on the bench. I missed the ball."—New York Press.

A Pessimist.
"I'm not too anxious to get a husband," said the wise matron. "Don't hunt for one."
"I should just sit down and wait for one, eh?" replied the maiden.
"Yes, for you'll sit up and wait for one often enough after you've got him."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Giving Due Credit.
There appears to have been once a person who, preaching upon an occasion before Lord North, took this for his text: "Promotion cometh neither from the east, nor from the west, nor from the south."—"The Cheerful Day," by Reginald Linn.

Ends Hunt For Rich Girl.
Often the hunt for a rich wife ends when the man meets a woman that uses Electric Bitters. Her strong nerves tell in a bright brain and even temper. Her peach-bloom complexion and ruby lips result from her pure blood; her bright eyes from restful sleep; her elastic step from firm, free muscles; all telling of the health and strength Electric Bitters give a woman, and the freedom from indigestion, backache, headache, fainting and dizzy spells they promote. Everywhere they are woman's favorite remedy. If weak or ailing try them. See it at all druggists.

A Time Killer.
"I've got an hour or two to kill. I wish I knew what to do."
"Just go over and ask Brown how the new baby is getting along."—Detroit Free Press.

Reassured.
"Well, bless you, needn't worry about that brother of yours in America. The paper says 'our foreign relations continue to be excellent.'"—London Illustrated.

Mental Twilight.
Mental health passes into mental disease most commonly in a gradual way, as light passes into darkness. There is a mental twilight, a borderland in which it is impossible to say whether the patient is mentally ill or not. It is always well for a man who undergoes such changes mentally to consult his doctor, and it is always well for the doctor not to make too light of such a change because treatment is usually far more effective in the borderland stage than it is when the symptoms have been fully developed. The best test of mental health is when a man feels a conscious sense of organic well-being, although many persons go through life with more or less of a sense of ill-being all the time and are not on that account to be regarded as insane.

Articles of Agreement.
We are all accustomed to see a patented article marked "Patented," with the date of the patent. It is doubtful, however, whether we in a hundred who notice the figure realized its importance to the inventor. The article on the subject published in the days of all patents of laws, under the provisions of which the inventor is entitled to apply the mark "Patented," together with the date and year the patent was granted, and the whole statute provides as a penalty for not making that "in any suit for infringement by the party failing to so mark no damages shall be recovered by the plaintiff, except on proof that the defendant was duly notified of the infringement and continued after such notice, to make use of or vend the article so patented."—Scientific American.

Remainder!
Originally it was a mixture of aromatic substances, carried about to courtiers and nobles, but by the early part of the sixteenth century it had become to mean the case in which such perfumes or deodorizers were carried, these cases being usually shaped like oranges or apples and having four, five or six divisions opening off on hinges from the center. The word is derived from the old French pomandier, signifying amber apple, amber being used in the course of ambergris and not the amber of which beads and the mouthpieces of pipes are made. The pomanders in the days of Henry VIII. and Elizabeth of England were made of gold, ivory, glass, silver or enamel and were generally hung from short ribbons. Their contents varied widely, but musk, lavender, rose-ambergris, nutmeg, cloves, mace and storax were among the most usual ingredients.—New York World.

Acocma's Queer Graveyard.
What is perhaps the most remarkable graveyard in the United States adjoins the old Spanish church in the ancient Indian pueblo of Acocma, N. M., and took more than forty years to construct. The village is situated high in the air upon a huge, flat topped rock, many acres in extent and entirely bare of soil. In order to create the graveyard it was necessary to carry up the earth from the plain 300 feet below, a blanket of a time, on the backs of Indians who had to climb with their heavy loads up a precipitous trail cut in the face of the cliff. The graveyard thus laboriously constructed is held in place on three sides by high retaining walls of stone.—Wide World Magazine.

Music and Appetite.
The majority of the great musical composers had appetites on an equality with their talents. It is told of Handel that when he dined alone at a restaurant he always took the precaution to order the meal for three. Once on asking, "Is de fumes retty?" at a restaurant, or a tavern, as it was then called, where he was little known, he got the reply, "As soon as the company comes," and established the waiter by sending himself, with the remark, "Den bring up de fumes; I'm de company." The appetite of Handel was not more voracious. He delighted in dining alone and always finished the meal ordered for five persons.

A Royal Heke.
No one would be likely to call King George V. a divine juror, but if one story of him is to be believed he possesses a considerably greater degree of spirit than is usually credited to him. It appears that on one occasion he was discussing affairs of state with Winston Churchill, who, in the course of the conversation, expressed one of his more radical opinions—just which it is perhaps well not to say. The king objected, saying that such a sentiment was at variance with his idea of the British constitution. "Oh," said the first lord of the admiralty, "and what is your idea of the constitution, may I ask, sir?" "This," said the king quietly, extending his hand toward the first lord, palm downward. There was nothing left for Churchill to do but kiss the proffered hand and retire from the room, which he did.—New York Post.

Got Through.
Among other startling statements in her composition on "A Railway Journey" the following was made by a little Baltimore girl:
"You must get a ticket, which is a piece of paper, and you give it to a man, who cuts a hole in it and lets you pass through."—New York Herald.

Curious Beshivos.
In the village of Hoerel, Silesia, there are a number of beshivos in the shape of life size figures carved in wood and painted in colors. The figures were carved more than a century ago by monks of the Naumburg monastery, who were at that time in possession of a large farm in the district. The beshivos represent different characters, ranging from Moses to a military officer, a country girl and a night watchman with a spear.

Byron and His Mother.
How different Byron's character might have been if he had had a different mother! A worse parent for such a child can hardly be imagined. Although at times indulgent to excess, her temper bordered on insanity. She rarely passed a week without an outburst of hysterical rage. One day after leading her child with abusive epithets she mockingly called him "a little bear." At this outrageous taunt a fearful light came into the child's eyes, but he suppressed his mother in self control. For a moment his lips quivered and his face whitened. Then very slowly he spoke these few short words, "I was born so, mother," and turned from the woman, who dared not follow him. Yet Byron loved her, and after she was dead he was found weeping in the sea at her bedside.—John L. Stoddard.

Her First Thought.
Ella—What a dreamer she is! Stella—I should say so! When I told her about an accident in which a poor fellow lost both of his legs she said that that was too bad, as he would not be able to leave any footprints on the sands of time.—Judge.

The Fastidious.
"Catch any fish on your trip?"
"No, and I can't understand why. Had a $200 outfit. Had the right kind of hooks and the latest thing in flies."
"Maybe you weren't wearing the right kind of hat."—Washington Herald.

She Did.
"Jack proposed to me while turning the music for me at the piano."
"Ah, I see! You played right into his hands."—London Answers.
