DAINTY COBWEBS.

How Spiders' Fine Spun Threads Compare With Human Hair.

it is hard to realize how small a spider's web really is. A famous microscopist once made some interesting comparisons of a cobweb with human "I have often compared the size of the thread spun Ly full grown spiders with a bair of my beard," he says. "I placed the thickest part of the hair before the microscope, and, from the most accurate judgment I could form. more than 100 of the spider's threads placed side by side could not equal the diameter of one such hair. If, then, we suppose such a hair to be of a round form it follows that 10,000 threads spun by the full grown spider, when taken together, will not be equal in substance to the size of a single

To this, if we add that 400 young spiders at the time when they begin to spin their webs are not larger than one full grown one and that each of these minute spiders possesses the same organs as the larger ones, it follows that the exceedingly small threads spun by these little creatures must be still 400 times slenderer, and consequently that 4.000,000 of these minute spiders' threads cannot equal in substance the size of a single hair.'
