It seems that candidates for the legislature are slow about announcing themselves. Perhaps they are loathe to tackle the financial condition of the county's affairs, which we understand are considerably behind, with increased expenses becoming necessary. Our next delegation in the general assembly will have plenty of opportunity to exercise their financial knowledge and business judgment.

What South Carolina needs as bad as anything else is some man, or two or three men, in the general assembly, who are big enough and able enough to devise and pass a scheme of equitable taxation, so as to make the real owners of property pay their share of the taxes. The man who can do this would be a statesman, and a benefactor to his fellow citizenship of the State. The liquor question is
