

TWO IMPORTANT SOUTH CAROLINA INSECT PESTS

The Fly—One of the Greatest Enemies to the Health of a Community.

Clemson College, S. C.—The Mexican cotton boll weevil made an unusual advance across Georgia during the last two years, due probably to the high winds. At the close of the season last fall the insect had reached the Savannah river and we may expect an invasion of South Carolina during 1917. Ordinarily it requires about three years from the date of its first appearance until the pest reaches its maximum numbers, which still leaves a good opportunity for South Carolina to study and prepare for the situation that is to confront it. It is a mistake to regard the matter lightly because it is absolutely certain that the weevil is coming and the climatic conditions of South Carolina are such that probably greater efforts are required than in many localities in other states to produce a cotton crop under weevil conditions. To produce cotton after the weevil has become thoroughly established requires the best farming of one kind or another.

The crop becoming an uncertainty under weevil conditions must be made earlier. We must begin the preparation of our seed in the fall; we must study the best early varieties of cotton best adapted to the locality and breed in dark places. (c) Treat the manure to kill the maggot and eggs. Where it is necessary to have the manures exposed to flies, it may be treated with borax, hellebore or Calcium Cyanamid and Acid Phosphate as follows:

BORAX. Powdered borax sprinkled over the manure at the rate of 2-3 pound to 8 bushels of manure and 2 or 3 gallons of water poured over the borax-treated manure to wash the borax into the manure will kill the maggots and keep the eggs from hatching. The outer edges of the manure pile should be carefully sprinkled as this is where the maggots congregate for pupation.

Caution should be used in treating manures to be employed for agricultural purposes, because of the injurious action on the plant growth of the excessive applications of the borax. This is the least expensive method where the manure is not intended for agricultural purposes.

HELLEBORE. Powdered white hellebore when made in a solution by mixing one-half pound of hellebore to 10 gallons of water and sprinkled over the manure gives good results in killing fly maggots. This solution can be made up in large quantities and kept until wanted for use. The best results have been obtained by allowing the solution to stand a few hours before applying. The composition of the manure will not be materially changed by using the hellebore. Animals will not be in danger when manure is treated in the stables as the poison is washed into the manure.

CALCIUM CYANAMID AND ACID PHOSPHATE. This mixture may be used at the rate of four pounds Calcium Cyanamid, four pounds Acid Phosphate to every eight bushels of manure. The substances should be mixed and spread over the manure after which it is sprinkled with ten gallons of water. The addition of these materials to the manure in the proportions given greatly increase the value of the manure for agricultural purposes by holding the ammonia which generally passes off as gas in the untreated material. This form of nitrogen is more slowly available as plant food than the ordinary nitrates. It should be applied to the crop not less than seventy to eighty days before harvest in order that the nitrogen may be completely utilized by that crop.

NOTE. The Calcium Cyanamid which is a medium for slow acting fertilizers is handled by manufacturers of mixed fertilizers.

MAGGOT TRAPS. This is a simple method to kill the fly in maggot stage—full information can be had by writing the Bureau of Entomology, Washington, D. C.

SCREEN THE PRIVY CLOSETS. Have the closets provided with a keg or barrel of air-slaked lime and use freely to dry up the closet material.

TRAPS. Make or buy fly traps. Place them in the windows at the stables, hog pens, and chicken houses. Send for plans of the Clemson fly trap.

learn how to keep it continually growing after it is once planted.

Whether the weevil is present or not no farm can find an excuse for not making a living for those who till it. This is the first duty and requirement of any farm. After the home supplies have been produced cotton should receive serious consideration. Intelligent fertilization is of great importance but still greater importance is the maintenance of the soil fertility mainly by legume crops.

Not only cotton stalks but all other stalks which are a part of the crop refuse should be incorporated into the soil in the fall and as far as possible the land should be planted into an effective cover crop to enable the land to hold its moisture, unused plant food and to prevent washing. There is no greater agency to produce a cotton crop than water. This has been demonstrated time and again in the cotton belt since the beginning of the weevil fight twenty-three years ago.

It is important to make a cotton crop and yet it is more important to maintain the health of the community and this matter has not been given sufficient thought as can be plainly seen by the number of flies we allow the right of way every day.

Flies are best controlled by caring for manures, the places where they breed. (a) Haul out and spread the manure once a week. (b) Store the manure in a dark shed—flies do not

Cotton Check of $150,000.

Sumter, April 9.—The largest sale of cotton ever made in Sumter was consummated today when C. P. Exum, buyer for Rogers, McCabe & Co., of Charleston, purchased 1,400 bales of cotton from Mayor L. D. Jennings at twenty cents a pound, the cotton grading slightly off middling, and a check of about $150,000 being paid for the lot.
