SEES MORE WARS TO FOLLOW THIS ONE

London Statist Has Gloomy Vision of Future for the World

BRITISH TRADE TO BE DEMORALIZED
Supremacy at Sea Threatened by U. S.—Industrial Unrest

That the present war will not end all wars, and that a state of peace to follow will last only just so long as it will take the present belligerents to recover from their exhaustion is set forth at some length in the latest issue of the London Statist to reach this side, says The New York Times. The journal, which is a force and authority in economics and finance in Great Britain, believes that England will have to keep up a considerable army and navy in any event and that a league of nations designed to make war impossible is nothing but a "pretty dream." It believes, also, that Britain's ascendancy at sea is threatened by America, not because of American initiative with that end in view, but because, if the war continues for four or five or six years, British trade will be demoralized.

This gloomy conception of things from the British standpoint is presented in one of a series of articles which the Statist is running on the theme of the public debt in relation to the suggestion that the wealthy of that country aid in liquidating it ac-ording to their individual means. It says:

"It has been proposed, as everybody knows, that a league of nations should be formed to make war impossible for the future. That is a dream which is not practicable in this world of ours. What may happen when we reach a real civilization it would be absurd to speculate. But in our present semi-civilization it is perfectly certain that this war will not end all war. On the contrary, it will leave behind it innumerable causes of quarrel, which one day or other will have to be settled by fresh wars. For example, is not every man of common sense, who has had some experience of life, and who knows from that experience how those feel who have done their very utmost to injure others and have been defeated, aware that those who wished to injure and did not fully succeed are the bitterest of all enemies? That being so, does any sane man doubt that a hatred of at least this country and France will animate Germans, Austrians and Magarys for many a long day after the struggle terminates?"

Peace Path Not Rose Strown.
"Further illustrations of what is likely to be encountered will occur to every reader. For instance, we have only to look at Russia as she is to convince ourselves that even those who are so anxious to make friends of the Central European powers are not able to avoid internal conflicts. Then there are the relations between Austria-Hungary, on the one hand, and her Slav subjects and the Balkan States on the other. Further, look at the relations between the other Balkan States and Bulgaria. Over and above this, think of the relations to one another of what are called the near-Latin States—France, Italy and Spain—as well as to their neighbors. Lastly, there are all of the thorny questions raised by the present condition of such countries as China.

"Whenever peace is restored, then we may indeed reasonably hope that there will be a few years of peace for the simple reason that the present belligerents will be exhausted. But that any hocus-pocus arrangements will prevent wars in the future is a pretty dream, which sensible men treat as a dream and nothing more. Consequently we shall have to keep up a considerable navy, as well as to take care of a mountain of debt which will be crushing.

"While we are in this state our existing army and our navy will be disbanded, or at all events such portions of both as will apparently not be required for the immediate future. Therefore, we shall have millions of men suddenly turned adrift upon the world to find some means of livelihood at home or abroad. Of these have suffered in health from exposure to the weather, from disabling wounds and from the effects of wounds that no doubt have been cured, but leave the men less healthy than they formerly were. All this means that among the millions of men discharged there will be a considerable proportion not as competent, from the purely labor point of view, as they were before they undertook to fight for the country.

Places Filled by Women

"These men will find that their old places have largely been taken by women, and as there will not be husbands for some millions of these women it is clearly out of the question that they should be turned adrift to sink or swim according to their capabilities. We shall have, therefore, a rivalry between men and women for employment. All this would be serious enough if we could assume that the country would quickly recover its old prosperity. But it is as plain as anything can be to every thinking person that the country cannot quickly recover its prosperity.

"All the available savings by the belligerent States, without exception, since the middle of 1914 until the armies are disbanded, and we find ourselves face to face with our accumulated difficulties will have taken into its hands the management of most of the industries of the country, and will have turned them all into failures. Moreover, the great multitude of establishments that were taken over to manufacture munitions, when it was found that we had light heartedly entered into the war without so much as thinking even of the necessity for providing ourselves with munitions—all these great establishments have been turned inside out. Their former equipment has been thrown to the winds, and they have been furnished with everything necessary to make munitions.

"All that large number of establishments will have to be refitted to perform whatever trades will be in most demand when we once more enjoy the blessings of peace. In addition, everybody who has sense to understand what he sees is aware that the roadbeds and the rolling stock of all our railways are out of repair, and consequently that will all need to be put in thorough order.

War's Effect on Trade
"Without continuing the catalogue of everything we shall have to do it will be perhaps sufficient to say that we shall have to reconstruct practically all our buildings and all their fittings before we can settle ourselves down to recover our trade. That brings us to the question, what will be the condition of our trade after possibly five or six or more years of desolating war? Our ascendancy at sea, if it has not actually passed to our American cousins, will be in extreme danger. Our education will be inferior not only to that of our present enemies, but to that of every forward country like the United States. And uneducated, with a miserable presence of a system of education, we shall be called upon to retrieve all our losses and reestablish our old prosperity.

"Lastly, we come to a catalogue of dangers, which, for the time at least, we prefer not to go into severally, but to remind the reader of their existence and their seriousness, the relations of employers and employed, the relation of Ireland to England, the new spirit that is awakening in India, with the dangers resulting from natural causes, such as the insufficient supply of water, and so on. Is it necessary to

"TANLAC IS THE BEST REMEDY I EVER TOOK"

Mrs. Cisson Has Strongest Endorsement for It

ENJOYS FINE HEALTH
Year Previously, she says, Tanlac Gave Her Lasting Relief

"Tanlac is the best remedy I ever took for my trouble, and I am glad to recommend it because it gave such fine results," said Mrs. Jessie Cisson, of No. 15 Main St., Woodside, Greenville, in a statement she gave May 31st. "I took Tanlac for a generally run down and weakened condition, and at the time I was almost sure I had a mild case of pellagra. I was very weak and very nervous. My head ached all the time. I was troubled a lot with dizziness and my appetite had about left me.

"But I felt like a new person when I quit taking Tanlac. I gained in weight and strength right from the time I began taking it. I soon had a good appetite, and the Tanlac soon had me feeling well and strong. The headaches and nervousness were soon relieved. I am enjoying fine health now and have been ever since I quit taking Tanlac, and that was a year ago."

add to the catalogue? Have we not cited enough to make us understand clearly that our position will be a serious one whenever peace returns? And, consequently, that it is the part, we will not say of wisdom, for that is past praying for, but even of ordinary common sense, to take thought in time to do what we can to avert evils which can be parried only either by extraordinary luck or by a judgment and foresight which we have never hitherto shown in our management of the national affairs."

HATCHING EARLY THE KEY TO "MORE POULTRY"

Put on the sitting hens; start the incubators! We need more chickens!

To double the poultry output of the country is one of our big war aims. That means that if everybody in a position to help do his part, $600,000,000 worth of food would be added to our supply every year. In its campaign to increase poultry production, the United States Department of Agriculture puts special emphasis upon the importance of early hatching because that is the key to the whole situation. Chickens hatched early are stronger, thrive better and have the advantage of a longer growing season. Hot weather retards the growth of chicks and, with the presence of lice, causes millions of late hatched chicks to die each year. Pullets hatched early produce eggs in the fall when hens are moulting. Early hatched cockerels are ready for the market when prices are highest. Early hatched pullets lay when prices of eggs are highest. Early layers will brood early the next spring. Publications of the Department of Agriculture, Farmers' Bulletin No. 585, "Natural and Artificial Incubation of Hens' Eggs," and Farmers' Bulletin No. 624, "Natural and Artificial Brooding of Chickens," will aid the early hatcher.

Unless a special effort is made throughout the country to hatch the 1918 chicken crop early, the Nation's need for a greatly increased output of poultry flesh and eggs is not likely to be fully met. While chickens can be hatched at any time of the year, it is the chickens hatched early in the spring that give the best results. Hatching should begin from February 1 in the South to March 1 in the North and West, and should be completed by May 1. The usual time for starting the incubators and sitting hens coincides too closely with the planting season on the farms and hatching operations are likely to be reduced on that account. Therefore, hatch early.

Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA

The city poultry keeper should tackle the business of hatching chicks or buying and rearing "day-old" chicks cautiously or not at all. Often it is inadvisable to attempt to renew the city poultry flock even though the temptation comes strongly to the poultry beginner with the first warm days of spring. Previous experience in the raising of chicks often increases the chances of success, but the land available to the back-yard poultryman usually is too small to undertake a chick business.

No attempt should be made to raise chicks unless a plot can be provided separate from that to which the hens have access and upon which there is grass or where a supply of green feed can be furnished. Where these conditions can not be had it is better for the beginner who is keeping only hens for eggs to kill the hens as soon as they have outlived their usefulness and replace them by well-matured pullets in the fall.

If it is believed practicable to hatch and rear a few chicks, this can best be done with hens. If it is desired to purchase and rear a few day-old chicks and no hens are available for the purpose, it is possible with little trouble and expense to construct a fireless brooder, which will serve in place of the hens.

It would be well for the beginner to obtain from the Department of Agriculture or from State agricultural colleges, publications on hatching and rearing.

In tests of a large series of insecticides conducted by entomologists of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, it was found that a few thorough applications of crude petroleum to the interior of poultry houses will completely destroy mites.
