LEAGUE OF NATIONS

COVENANT OF FAITH

Testifying That American Dead Did Not Die in Vain

SPEECH BY THE PRESIDENT

Delivered at Decoration of American Graves in Cemetery Near Paris.

Paris, May 30.—(By the Associated Press.)—In the American cemetery, at Suresnes, near Paris today, during the ceremony of paying tribute to the American dead on the occasion of Memorial Day, President Wilson made his first reference to the league of nations since the covenant of the society which will have as its object the prevention of future wars was completed.

His words were delivered in the presence of thousands of American soldiers and many civilians and the official representatives of the French Government including Marshal Foch. Numerous distinguished members of Allied officialdom who had to come to pay tribute to the American dead also heard the President's words.

Touching on the reasons which had brought the American troops across seas, the President said they had come to defeat the things for which the Central Powers stood—"the arrogant, selfish domination which they intended to establish; and they came, moreover, to see to it that there never should be a war like this again."

Must Never Occur Again.

"It is for us, particularly for us who are civilized," the President continued, "to use our proper weapons of counsel and agreement to see to it that there never is such a war again. The nation that should now fling out of this common concord of counsel would betray the human race. So it is our duty to take and maintain the safeguards which will see to it that the mothers of America and the mothers of France and England and Italy and Belgium and all other suffering nations should never be called upon for this sacrifice again. This can be done. It must be done. And it will be done."

Their Sacrifice Not in Vain.

"The things that these men left us, thought they did not in their counsels conceive it, is the great instrument which we have just erected in the league of nations. The league of nations is the covenant of government that these men shall not have died in vain. * * * I look forward for the time when every man who now puts his counsel against the united service of mankind under the league of nations will be just as ashamed of it as if he now regretted the union of the States."

No More Secret Councils.

The President declared that the day of secret counsels was past, because the people were in the saddle. The private councils of statesmen, he added, would no longer determine the destinies of nations.

Bareheaded, in the glare of the sun, President Wilson spoke for more than half an hour, most of the time in an impassioned defense of the league of nations and in appeal for its support.

Great Panoramic View

The cemetery is situated on the hillside of the ancient fortress of Mount Valerien. With the old buildings at his back the President looked over the graves of the American soldiers and down into the City of Paris, which stood in the distance like a panorama. The approaches to the cemetery and the paths winding their way through the burial ground were lined with soldiers standing at attention, Americans on one side and French on the other, as the President arrived.

The greater part of the khaki-clad listeners to the President's speech were grouped in the shade of the old fort, but a crowd of others soldiers and civilians pressed close to the speakers stand.

Warmly Applauded.

There was unwaivering attention by all to the President's utterances and when he concluded his auditors warmly applauded him. Capt. Andre Tardieu, French high commissioner, who was in the stand with President Wilson, listened attentively to the speech. The President never faltered in his action. Earnestness pervaded his words. From a nearby point, Mrs. Wilson listened to her husband. She and the President drove to the cemetery in different automobiles and Mrs. Wilson remained in her car instead of going to the speakers stand.

Before President Wilson began his speech a message to the President from Premier Clemenceau dealing with the fellowship between the French and Americans was read.

The letter begins:

Clemenceau's Letter.
"Faithful to noble tradition, the living army renders homage to the dead army and all France has associated itself with this homage."

After comparing the Americans who have fallen in France with the French who fell in America, M. Clemenceau continues:

"France will ever cherish their memories. With America, France will preserve in space as an inspiration and example an underlying remembrance of their enthusiasm, discipline and courage. We see the wreaths on their tombs, and will take care of them as piously and gratefully as the tombs of our own soldiers."

With the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" and "The Marseillaise" by the band and the sounding of "Taps" by the bugle the official program ended, but President Wilson afterwards personally deposited a wreath in honor of the American dead in the name of the boy scouts of America.

During the ceremony a reminder of the war floated at anchor nearby one of the observation balloons which formerly did sentry duty on the various fronts.
