RIOTS SERIOUS IN WASHINGTON

First Appearance of Troops on Such Mission Since Suffrage Demonstrations of 1913.

Washington, July 21.—It was said by officials that the riots were of a more serious nature than anything which had occurred since the outbreak during the period of the old "feather-buster legislature" in the turbulent days after the War. Between the dates before the present form of district government was organized. Tonight was the first time that the parols of cavalry had patrolled the streets since March 3, 1913, when police refused to stop woman suffrage demonstrations.

The outbreaks started Saturday after a series of attacks on white women, several murders, scores of robberies and general lawlessness. Several hundred soldiers, sailors and Marines joined together Saturday to search for a negro suspected of attacking the wife of an employee of the naval aviation bureau. Unable to find him they made their way to the center of the city where they vented their anger on any negro they happened to meet.

The provost guard and police reserves had been called out early that evening but the disturbances continued. Negroes were taken from street cars and passing automobiles and beaten. Numerous brawls occurred on Pennsylvania Avenue and other streets of the business district. Fifteen negroes were injured so seriously that they were taken to hospitals. Patrolman McGrath was shot in the breast and several white men were cut and bruised. The outbreaks continued unabated until several hours after midnight. Negroes who ventured into the business districts were chased and beaten while it was unsafe for white persons to venture into negro residential sections.

Officers of the army and navy today declared that there was no proof that enlisted men were inciting and participating in the riots but stated that if such was found to be the case, steps would be taken to prevent them leaving the camps.

Secretary Daniels directed officers in the Washington district to spare no effort to prevent participation of men wearing uniforms.

The district authorities issued a statement today pointing to the action which had been taken by government authorities in the outbreaks and urging the people to remain in their homes tonight unless it was absolutely necessary for them to leave.

Leaders in the house and senate announced tonight that congressional inquiries would be started tomorrow to fix the responsibility for the riots and to formulate plans for preventing further outbreaks. Meetings of the district outbreak-committee ETA ET E T trict committee of both chambers will be held, it was stated, and the city commissioners and police officials will be called into conference.
