DEATH OF MR. S. J. BOWMAN

Died last Thursday about sun down, Mr. Samuel J. Bowman, aged 81 years, and was buried in the Manning cemetery Friday afternoon. In the death of "Uncle Reck," as he was affectionately known this community loses a good citizen, and the list of Confederate veterans is short one more hero. The deceased was one of the gamest soldiers that fought in the civil war. He was severely wounded twice, but managed to survive and lived to a ripe old age. Mr. Bowman was elected county treasurer about 32 years ago, holding that position for 18 years, when he retired from public life. He made a good officer as he did a soldier, doing things well and accurate. He had been in poor health for quite awhile, but the final break down only came a few weeks ago when he gave up and went to bed and remained there until the end last Thursday. He is survived by a widow and several children which we extend our sympathy to.

The Pot and Kettle

The Passing of John Barleycorn

You may talk o' gin an' beer" says Mr. Kipling,—so we proceed at once to do so. It has been said that no man however great was ever removed from public life that his place was not promptly and acceptably filled by another. And now as if to challenge the statement, old John Barleycorn ups and dies. At best his days appear to be numbered, for his demise has been cold-bloodedly and deliberately planned and there seems little doubt that the obsequies usual on such occasions will be carried out with all due formality and strictly in accordance with pre-arranged schedule. This particular funeral cortege promises to be an imposing one, with an exceedingly large number of mourners in attendance. King Alcohol is dead, long live the—but right here it is pertinent to inquire as to his successor. Who is the next in line? Where is the royal beverage entrenched in public favor, ready and worthy to ascend the throne and benignly reign in the hearts of an afflicted people. Some say it is

"Tea does our fancy aid. Repress those vapors which the head invade, And keep the palace of the soul."

Certainly Tea is the beverage if we accept the dictum of Chin-Nung, an ancient and very learned Chinese Scholar and Philosopher, who some centuries ago blandly observed that "Tea is better than wine, for it leadeth not to intoxication, neither does it cause a man to say foolish things." There are views pro and con. One opinion is as good as another. However we regard the matter it would be impossible to single out any one beverage to benefit in particular by the enforcement of prohibition throughout the land. In the case of many good people who champion their favorite beverage and predict for it an overwhelming increase in sales, the wish we believe, is father to the thought.

Popular as beverages, tea and coffee are likely to occupy a more prominent place in the public thought than ever before. They are far and away the most important of the non-alcoholic stimulants. Coffee houses in the olden days (as has already been related in these columns) were the legitimate rivals of the Tavern and the Public House, and who shall say that repressed and modernized they may not yet, in a measure at least, take the place of the American saloon.

"Coffee, which makes the politician wise, And see through all things with his half-shut eyes."

But others with equal vehemence maintain tea is the beverage, because forsooth,
