BRING MOTH MORER ENEMY FROM CUBA TO COMBAT PEST

The expedition to Cuba, under the direction of the United States Department of Agriculture, for the purpose of introducing to this country enemies of the sugar-cane moth borer has returned after succeeding in sending to the sugar fields of the United States several thousand individuals of the moth-borer parasite, Euzenilliopsis, diatraeae, a very small two-winged fly that, in Cuba, keeps the borer under control. The introduced individuals have been distributed in Louisiana and Texas cane fields. The ultimate success of the effort will depend on whether or not the parasites can succeed in overwintering in the United States, and this fact can not be known until next spring. The expedition consisted of five men, a specialist from the Bureau of Entomology and four other entomoligists whose salaries were paid by the Louisiana sugarcane growers.
