"MURDER GANG" IN IRELAND CONDEMNED

Carnarvon, Wales, Oct. 9.—Premier Lloyd George in a fighting speech to his Welsh constituents today, which was intended for the world at large, declared that the government intended to restore order in Ireland by "methods however stern," and proceeded with its home rule bill.

The prime minister turned down dominion home rule, protesting against the suggestions that the government should go farther than did Gladstone or Asquith, not because Ireland needs it, not because it is fair to the United Kingdom, but because crime has been successful.

A republic, he insisted, would not satisfy Irishmen as "Ulster would have something to say to that."

Nothing which has happened in the past, continued the premier, would justify the present conditions in Ireland and after giving figures on the number of police killed, he said:

"The police have endured this state of things in a way which is the highest testimony to their discipline and self-restraint. There is no doubt that at last their patience has given way and there has been some severe hitting back."

"Real Murder Gang."

The premier declared that "a real murder gang" is dominating Ireland, making it impossible for reasonable men to come together to consider the best way to govern the country. "It is essential," he went on, "in the interest of Ireland that the gang should be broken up and unless I am mistaken we shall do it. But side by side with that we must proceed with the measure of self-government in Ireland."

In speaking of the reprisals, Mr. Lloyd George argued that the police would not bomb houses and shoot men if there was no provocation. Policemen to the number of 238 had been shot, he declared, and of these 109 had been shot dead. This had tried the patience of the police to the breaking point.

As for self-government for Ireland, the premier explained that if complete dominion home rule were accorded, Ireland could have conscription. In that case, he pointed out, England's army of 100,000 men might be confronted with an Irish army of 500,000. Conscription for England, he said, must necessarily follow dominion home rule in Ireland. Mr. Lloyd George said he could understand and sympathize with the idea that self government should be given because it would bring good-will but not because "a gang of assassins had bullied the government into it." It was all very well, he continued, to talk about a dominion form of government, but Ireland demanded an absolutely independent republic and even that would not satisfy the Irish. He declared Ulster would not have an Irish republic and "we do not want to negotiate peace with civil war at our very doors."

Assisted Germany.

The premier charged that Ireland had assisted the German submarine campaign and declared that, although little had been said about it, Ireland was Great Britain's worry during the war. Had anyone ever proposed "such lunacy," he demanded, as to allow Ireland to obtain her independence with her own army and navy and her capacity for assisting Great Britain's enemies.

No one wanted to manage Ireland's domestic affairs, he said, but dangerous weapons like armies and navies were better under the control of the imperial parliament, and the government would resist any attempt to give Ireland a separate navy and army. The present home rule bill, he declared, would have given Ireland every possible facility to manage her own domestic affairs.
