THE PRESIDENT COULD DO IT

If the coming winter is as severe as has been predicted the distress of the unemployed and their families will be acute. This fact is so manifest that the president of the United States, with all of his cares and burdens, deems it necessary to take a personal interest in the plans for affording necessary relief. Believing that the president has an open mind, we presume to offer a suggestion.

Let him issue a proclamation calling upon all of the people of our country who own motor cars to set aside one Sunday in a month to be known and observed as gasless Sunday, and to be continued until there is no longer a necessity for its observance. In other words, let every car remain in its garage that day and night. Then let the owners of the cars voluntarily contribute the price of the gas and oil they thus save that day toward a fund for feeding the hungry and furnishing warm clothes for those who are unable to procure them.

Let the enormous sum thus realized be turned over to the Salvation Army and the Volunteers of America for distribution when and where it is most needed. We suggest distribution by these two organizations because they are in close and constant touch with the poor and distressed, and are, we believe, better fitted for the work than any of the numerous charitable organizations. Keeping a car idle on Sunday would work a hardship on no one—assuming, of course, that doctors, undertakers, etc., would be exempt where necessity arises for the legitimate use of a car.

The contributing of the gas and oil thus saved would not be an expense to the car owner, as he would simply be contributing the amount for the relief of distress instead of burning it up on the road. A Sunday at home might be refreshing to millions of people who are always on the move.

An hour at church might be both refreshing and beneficial. The president can do it—if he will. It would be a small minded citizen indeed who would not respond to so laudable and reasonable request from the most exalted ruler in the world.

SAY, YOU!

Have you visited our store lately? If you have not, you have lost money. Our prices are below cost of production. We are doing this to give our friends the benefit of getting their wants and needs for a little of nothing, and at the same time save us the expense of moving our tremendous stock the first of the year. It costs money to move goods, and we would rather our customers get the difference in price between moving and the cost to us. Come quick, before our stock is broken. We are always glad to serve you.
