blissings of all the uplift movements, whether of health, sanitation, or what not, the abolition of any and all special privileges to any class of citizens, a fair and just administration of the law, and the encouragement to live a better and higher moral life, through the removal and abolition of all such institutions and instrumentalities which cause the moral downfall of man.

Like my friends of Gopher Prairie, I have some admiration for such characters as Smith who carry around with them the odor of barnyard manure, or Jones who clipped the ears and disemboweled numerous Germans in No-Man's Land, or Richard Roe who became an expert at castrating hogs, or John Doe who could so audaciously fool so large a number of his fellow citizens, but with all due respect for my friends of Gopher Prairie, I could not honestly and without a terrible wrenching of my rola conceptions of citizenship, vote for either Smith or Jones or Richard Roe or John Doe.

Yours truly,
 J. J. Cantey.
WATER SPREAD OVER GRAVELLY SOIL RECOVERED IN DROUGHT

Ingenuity and resourcefulness are both working overtime for irrigation farmers in southern California. Water for irrigation has generally a higher value there than in any other section of the West, and has become so scarce that, in the absence of suitable reservoir sites where usual methods of storage might be put into effect, the practice has grown up in recent years of spreading the flood waters over the gravelly soil where the streams emerge from the mountains. Where this is done the underground formations are such as to hold the water until it can be recovered by pumping during the irrigation season.

Upon request of communities interested in the possibilities of this plan for their own development, the Bureau of Public Roads, United States Department of Agriculture, through its agricultural engineering division, recently made an informal survey of what has been accomplished so far by such underground storage, finding that the method is now practiced on about a dozen streams in southern California and that it has been effective in raising the water level in the wells through a series of years, notwithstanding the increasing demands made upon them by irrigation neces-

Manufacturing in the South.

Reproduction of editorial appearing in Spartanburg Herald, of Sunday morning, Oct. 2nd.

The Herald has for years hammered editorially on the advisability and necessity of manufacturing enterprises being developed in the south other than cotton manufacture.

The Piedmont section of South Carolina is equipped by nature to become a vast and diversified manufacturing section. It has the waterpower to turn the wheels of machinery and the very highest type of labor to make these machines produce efficient work.

We watch with pride and interest new manufacturing plants as they develop in the south and are hopeful that the immediate future will see much development along this line.

A representative of this paper during the past week had occasion to visit the SOUTHERN TIRE & RUBBER COMPANY, which is located at Augusta, Ga., and returned to Spartanburg very enthusiastic over the work that the infant enterprise is producing. This factory was established some five years ago for the manufacture of automobile tires, and today it is running at full capacity day and night to supply the demand for their goods. The success of this institution should serve as an inspiration for others to follow in their lead. In the manufacture of tires, the most important item used in their making, with the exception of rubber, is cotton. The south produces cotton. Why should it be shipped east and west to be built into tires and then shipped back south for southerners to use? The south can import rubber just as good as any other section of the country; it has the cotton, the water power and the cleanest and most capable manpower of any section of the United States. The south is, therefore, even better equipped to build better tires than sections where foreigners form a large percentage of the population and where heavy freight rates on southern cotton add to the cost of manufacture.

This is only a single article which the south is prepared to manufacture. When will she awake to her opportunities and forge ahead to the position in the manufacturing field where she rightfully belongs?

Editors Note:—
 Southern Thick Tires are sold in Manning by the Clarendon Motor Company. As evidence of the economy of manufacturing tires in the South the prices are much lower than on other lines and Southern Tires for Fords sell as low as $7.75 and carry the regular tire warranty.—Adv.

POLITICAL VIEWS OF HON. J. J. CANTEY

Summerton, S. C., March 30, 1922.
 Editor of The Manning Times:

In view of the political campaign, which will take place in South Carolina during the coming summer, it may be of interest to your readers for me to relate what I saw and heard on a recent trip to Gopher Prairie. On this trip to Gopher Prairie, I became acquainted with various groups of citizens, who were booming and boosting equally as many candidates for the Governorship of the State. There was one group of citizens, who were advocating the election of Smith as the next Governor of the State. It appeared that Smith was born a poor boy, had no educational opportunities, had taken up the occupation of farming, and knew absolutely nothing about the economic and political issues which confronted the people of Gopher Prairie, but Smith had lived close to the soil, with his own hands he had distributed fertilizer, barnyard and stable manure, and actually carried around with him the odor of stable manure, had made some success at farming, was one of the boys and to the manor born, and therefore the citizens of Gopher Prairie argued with some degree of energy that Smith would make a good Governor.

There was another group in Gopher Prairie, who were demanding very vociferously the election of Jones as the next Governor of the State. It was true that Jones could neither read nor write, had never heard of the sciences of sociology or political economy, had made no study of the intricate question of taxation, had never realized that men are both social and political animals and have certain interests in common which perforce they must solve through the instrumentality of the State, but Jones had clipped the ears of disemboweled numerous Germans in No Man's Land, and therefore the citizenship of Gopher Prairie invariably applauded whenever the name of Jones was mentioned in connection with the Governorship of the State.

There was yet another group in Gopher Prairie, who were ardent admirers of Richard Roe, who did not claim to be a statesman, seldom read the daily newspapers, knew nothing of the various uplift movements which operate under the protection of and through the instrumentality of the State, but Richard Roe had acquired considerable expertness and had accumulated some wealth in following after the noble art of castrating hogs, and therefore the citizenship of Gopher Prairie asserted with some degree of reason that if Richard Roe could so readily become an expert at castrating hogs, there was no intelligent reason in the world why Richard Roe should not make an expert and successful Governor of the State.

But the most interesting and amusing group in Gopher Prairie were the friends of John Doe. It was asserted with great joy and delight and in a very haughty manner, that if John Doe were elected the next Governor of the State, he would pardon all the rapists, murderers, violators of the prohibition law, and other criminals, would veto all appropriation Acts, discontinue the payment of taxes, abolish the Court Houses, abandon the public roads and educational institutions, reduce all men whether good or bad to a basis of Bedlamism and Bolshevism, and whenever John Doe walked down the main street of Gopher Prairie, the noble citizenship of that famous town, with shouts and loud acclaim, would greet the first citizen of the town and State.

I am just a bit inclined to believe that most of us are given to relying under which we live, in order to find happiness. Several thousand years ago, a great Hebrew teacher established the fact and the principle that the kingdom of heaven is within a man, that happiness can be found only in and through hard work, and that if any man would find happiness

he must take up his cross and render some useful service to his fellowmen, either as carpenter, merchant, lawyer, doctor, or some other useful occupation. It is true that men are social and political animals, have certain interest and institutions in common, common carriers which should be regulated for the common good, and common hopes and opportunities, which must be worked out and administered through the instrumentality of the State, but the most that any individual has the moral right to demand and expect from the State, is protection in person and property, the right and the opportunity to work hard in some useful occupation and thereby render service to his fellowmen, equal assessments in the matter of taxation, equal opportunity to acquire an education and enjoy the
