

AN EVIDENCE OF THE UNREST OF THE INDIANS

Calcutta, India Feb. 5, 1922. This morning a large number of Indian policemen under several British sergeants searched the place where the new school has been started for the students who left the Government schools when Ghandi called for a boycott of the all Government institutions. This school here has been searched time after time as the headquarters of the Monco operators movement and they have arrested one or two of the men who have served as secretaries from time to time. This morning a crowd gathered as the search was being made and when they came out without anything the crowd yelled for Ghandi as the police rode away. They did nothing then to try to drive the crowd away. This afternoon after five o'clock Wellington Square, the park just in front of the place where I am staying was the scene of a rather unusual sight. Large crowds had been gathering all the afternoon and there must have been fully three thousand people there when I first looked out and saw the great concourse of people gathered in the park and around the fence on the outside. I was first attracted by the noise of the shouts "Victory for Ghandi" and when I looked out there were people running back and forth and I was at quite a loss to know what was happening at first. Then I saw uniformed policemen of three kinds all about over the park. The Indian policemen were in white with red turbans. The British sergeants were in blue with white helmets and were armed with good sized sticks, the Indians had bamboo poles as long as their height, and then there were what they call the civil police. These were uniformed in white foreign clothes and had black bands around their arms. They were provided with short police clubs such as are used in America. The British were severe with the people whenever they gathered in little bunches and often were they seen to strike men with force using these big sticks. The crowd did not at any time make any effort at self protection, and only seemed to wince when they were hit. In fact it seemed to me that they did not even show any decided signs of resentment. They did not leave the place, however, but simply moved back and forth from one part of the park to another. Whenever the police would move from one part of the park to another those of lesser courage would run back and forth to avoid the blows that were delivered without favor upon the first man that fell in the way, but many of the people stood their ground and these were rarely struck, it was the fleeing crowd that they always pursued. This attempt to scatter the crowd was kept up for over an hour, and finally more people were present than when they began and yells for Ghandi were constantly heard. I noticed that there were several men lying on the ground and I saw one being carried out of the park and taken away on the shoulders of some six or eight other men. There were at least two others down on the ground, whether they were really hurt or not I do not know as they may have been feigning injury to get sympathy or glory. For it is now considered quite an honor to get hurt or put into prison for the salvation of the country. Ghandi has been preaching this right along and many there are who are put into prison and count it an honor to be able to say that they have sacrificed this much for the glory of their mother country. Later on in the afternoon, I noticed that the foreign police seemed to be using their hands pointing the people rather than striking them with sticks. The Indian policemen were never observed to strike a single man during the whole afternoon and their chief job seemed to be following up the Britishers and giving them "moral" support. The people often argued with the Indian policemen and if trouble comes I would hate to be dependent upon the loyalty of these men. The mob was orderly and well behaved. I went out among them to see just what the feeling was and there was nothing out of the way at all as I passed back and forth among them. The day will come, however, I fear when this will not be the case and there is going to be bloodshed on a big scale. Unless the Government takes a firm hold now and exercises this hold fearlessly, the Indians are going to attribute their lack of action as fear of them, and then the trouble is going to come compounded. Ghandi says non-violent but he cannot control the mob once it gets started.

It's a waste of time, labor and money in making repairs — (or doing new work) — with lumber that will rot out quickly. "He Who Uses Cypress Builds But Once." Cypress lasts and lasts and lasts and practically refuses to wear out or rot out. That's the kind of lumber to buy and use. Cypress means "double money's-worth," and often more if you BUY THE GRADE THAT FITS THE JOB. For many uses the lower grades are exactly the thing. This fact gives wise buyers a still further advantage over those who simply order "some lumber." You see the point.
