The National Education convention, which has just closed its annual meeting in Boston, emphasized many matters of importance to the country regarding the teaching of its youth. Among these none can be considered of greater importance than the increasing demand in rural communities for a higher standard of education than has obtained in the past. The "little red school house" of song and story has served its day and gone out of date. With good roads and adequate transportation facilities, good schools, with first class equipment and properly trained teachers, can be made available for any community, no matter how small.

The average farm family feeds three city families besides itself. This is figured out by census experts who find that of the nation's 41 million and more workers only 11 millions are engaged in agriculture. A near-sighted farmer might look upon the city people as parasites, and to a certain extent they may be. But without city folks the farmer would have no market for his surplus products. Many of the things the farmer could not go along without are made in the city. His furniture, rugs, clothing, automobiles, shoes, wire fencing, musical instruments and other devices come from the city. It is a fair exchange between city and country except when farm and city prices are out of balance as is often the case.

The climate of England has been changed by the construction of a railroad on the east coast of Florida, according to John Harrison, a British scientist, who has been giving the matter close study and investigation for several years. The course of the gulf stream has been changed, writes Mr. Harrison, by the construction of the railway, 70 miles long, from Homestead to Key West. Although some portions of this railway are constructed on piles, a great and increasing part of it consists of solid embankment, and the whole effect is to narrow considerably on its western side the Florida channel, through which the gulf stream flows, and thus at once concentrate the warm waters of that stream and to give them a somewhat more easterly course. Mr. Harrison says the center of the northern branch of the gulf stream formerly struck the west coast of England while there is frost in the west coast of Scotland, but it now runs south of Ireland and straight up the English and Bristol channels. This, he argues, accounts for the excessively warm summers in England during the last few years, since the railroad was completed. There are excessive heat waves in the south of England while there is frost in Glasgow.

MR. MERCHANT
You Need the Newspaper

The newspaper of today is the most powerful medium of advertising on earth. In the old days the merchant may have thought he was a benefactor and that he was contributing his bit "as a public-spirited citizen" when he carried a two-inch space in the village paper every week in the year and generally without change of copy. Possibly he was.

But that is changed now. A new order has arrived. People read advertisements. Many find their greatest interest in looking over the advertising pages to get news that will save them money, and, take it from John D. Rockefeller, the way to save your dollars is first to save your pennies.

Advertisements today are right up to the minute. They are as fresh as the news of the world or the latest baseball score. Live merchants cater to live people and they know they must not alone be up to the minute, but they must be some distance ahead. They must anticipate the wants of their customers.

And they do. Turn to the advertisements in this paper right now. Just read what the merchants are offering. Notice the invitations for you to do business with them. Notice how attractively the advertisements are set up and how inviting they are.

Do you know that some firms think so much of a style of type that they buy series of it just for their advertisement? You can never mistake B. Altman's advertisement. As soon as you see the open type you know it is Altman's advertisement without looking for the name. This is true of many firms.

Business men—that is the successful ones—know advertising pays big returns. Unsuccessful men don't advertise because they are unsuccessful. That's the answer. Look over your town right now and pick out the big firms. They're the advertisers. Advertising is the tonic that puts dividends in the banks.

Everybody reads advertisements today. Mr. Merchant, is your advertisement in this newspaper?
