No New Cases Polio In County Past Week

Columbia, Sept. 7. — (Special to The Chronicle)—No new cases of poliomyelitis were reported from Laurens county between August 28 and 31, but 19 cases were reported throughout South Carolina during that time, according to a report this week from the preventable diseases division of the State Board of Health.

Polio cases for Laurens county since January 1 total seven, while in the state, 247 cases have occurred, with 124 reported to the State Board of Health during the month of August. York county, where two new cases were reported between August 28 and 31, has the highest total, 32, of any county in the state, with Richland county next highest with 26 cases.

According to the board of health, polio cases in North Carolina now total 1,779, with 62 of the new cases reported between August 27 and 30.
