FARM SUBSIDIES MUST GO

In calling for a farm program that is "sensible and economically sound and not a political poultrie," President Eisenhower raised the hopes of Americans who know something must be done to end the shameful annual waste of $6 billion on farm subsidies. But the President dashed the hopes with the detailed suggestions he offered to Congress—suggestions that embodied the old disproved answers to the farm problem.

Certainly, the President understands the dimensions of the farm problem. He sees the danger to the nation in costly waste, for he cited examples of colossal waste. "The government," said Mr. Eisenhower, "sustains a net cost of more than

$1,000,000 a minute—$1.5 million every day—the year round, to stabilize wheat prices and income." He also revealed that the nation has $3.5 billion tied up in stored wheat. "Although this means that well over 30 per cent of the total funds invested in inventories and loans of the Commodity Credit Corporation goes for wheat," he said, "this crop provides only 6 per cent of the cash receipts of farm products."

These costs are for wheat alone. All farm surplus storage and handling costs the government $3 million per day. The government has a total of $9.5 billion tied up in surplus crops. The budget for next year includes an additional $5.6 billion for agricultural price supports, second in size only to interest among non-defense budget items.

Anyway, recognizing that existing farm plans only further distort the wheat market and lead to new and higher costs, the President should have outlined new remedies. Unfortunately, the President's own farm program, like that of the Democrats, seems more concerned with the vote of the farm states than with the farm problem.

Instead of repudiating the idea of farm subsidies, Mr. Eisenhower actually suggested that they should be expanded! He proposed that the Soil Bank raise its conservation reserve to 60 million acres. The result of this would be to tremendously enlarge the group of agriculturists who are engaged in what Southerners call "pizza farming." By that, I mean the practice of sitting in a rocking chair on the front porch and farming the U. S. Treasury instead of fields. More and more so-called farmers will cease planting and depend on the postman to deliver a monthly check for not planting.

The hard truth is that no progress can be made on solving the nation's farm program until the subsidy idea is firmly and permanently rejected. To get farming back on a sane basis means that farmers must learn to do without federal aid.

And why shouldn't farmers do without federal aid? Or, if farmers should have it, why shouldn't everybody have it? Take the automobile industry, for instance; why not pay the manufacturers for not making automobiles? Why not pay a manufacturer for placing one of his plants in the Automobile Plant Bank? Or, if they make more automobiles than they can sell, why doesn't the government purchase and store the surplus? It would be just as sensible.

The massive federal aid received by the farmers amounts to many of them to a guaranteed annual wage. Of course, the farm programs of the last quarter century are in themselves grossly unfair to some farmers. Only growers of certain crops receive this federal aid. Farmers who grow collards, sweet potatoes, lettuce, raisers of cattle—who actually declined price supports and have been better off ever since—receive not a cent from the federal treasury. Instead they pay taxes to help the growers of wheat, cotton, tobacco, and other favored groups.

What the nation's farm commo-ties need is free enterprise. By that, I mean the free operation of economic forces so that marginal, inefficient producers are weeded out. "You can't do that to us," says the farm bloc. But the nation can, if it has the courage of its convictions. The nation must do it if it wants sufficient farms instead of large numbers of farmers on what amounts to a dole. The existence of this dole is grossly unfair to the taxpayers, who must contribute to it; it costs them double—in higher taxes and higher prices in the grocery stores.

And so the need is to repeal all the farm laws written since New Deal days, and start over from scratch. That may be politically difficult, but it's not impractical. Unless the idea of subsidy payments is directly challenged and defeated, billions will continue to be spent annually to feed the rats in government storage warehouses, and the farm problem never will be solved.
