EVERYDAY COUNSELOR
By Bishop Herbert Spangh

So often we don't appreciate that which we have until we lost it.

While I was in the theological seminary I bought a set of books on the recommendation of my bishop. A profound student, he recommended them highly. Some of my young ministerial friends scoffed at them, and soon convinced me that it was old fashioned. I expressed that thought to an older minister whose judgment was better than mine, although I would not admit it at the time. He immediately offered to buy them. This made me think that perhaps I had a good set, but I had already talked too much, so I sold them to him somewhat reluctantly.

Soon I discovered that I was having a hard time finding a substitute for them. Then I set out to buy the set again, but found them very much in demand, and the price of a new set was prohibitively high to me. After several years' search, I was able to buy back the set I had sold, by reason of the death of the minister who bought them from me. Needless to say, these books will not be put on the market again by me.

All too often we grow unappreciative of those who should be dear to us: parents, husband, wife, children. We are with them daily, and the edge of our appreciation grows dull. Then death suddenly deprives of them. Too late we realize what they have meant to us and remorse lays hold of the heart, but it's too late.

In my personal experience in houses of mourning, time and again I have heard men and women pour out their regrets with tears, because they have not been kind and appreciative of someone who is now gone, and there is no opportunity to make amends.

There are always so many things we are going to do for friends and loved ones. There is the letter we are going to write, the call we are going to make on some friends. We are going to live better lives. We are going to make our Christian profession and unite with the church—tomorrow, but tomorrow never seems to come. When it does come, it may be too late. These lines by an unknown writer found in my scrapbook give pointed reminder to this:

"Around the corner I have a friend. In this great city that has no end. Yet days go by and weeks rush on. And before I know it a year is gone. And I never see my old friend's face, For life is a swift and terrible race.

Most people avoid bees—for obvious reasons. Rheumatism sufferers of old, however, tried to get stung. They thought bee stings were an effective treatment for rheumatism. Now most of us prefer the more reliable—and painless—remedies of today. Thanks to medical science we have many safe, fast-acting pain relievers. Other powerful drugs, too. When you're ill, take advantage of these newer medications—but only upon the advice of your physician. Then let us render complete prescription service.
