88 Radios For Every 100 Persons!

Read About This And Other Interesting Facts Prepared BY WLBG. In Recognition Of National Radio Month Being Celebrated In May.

Radio is growing faster than the population itself.

Ten years ago, there were 85 million radio sets in the United States... now there are more than 155 million—an increase of at least 80 per cent.

In 1950, there were 56 sets in use for every 100 Americans. Now there are 88 sets for every 100 persons.

There are 60 million homes equipped with one or more radios... in 1950, there were only 41 million. Out of every 100 households, 97 have radios... and we're averaging more than two radios for every home.

It's said that radio goes everywhere—and it does. We have, for example, 39 million car radios in use... a radio in three out of every four cars. And the percentage of car radios is going up... out of every 100 automobiles built in the United States last year, 79 were equipped with radios at the factory.

The United States has more than four thousand Standard and F-M stations... double the total 10 years ago.

Despite the impact of television, there's considerable evidence that more Americans are doing more listening to radio. Radios are found in 30 per cent of the trucks, 70 per cent of the boats and 80 per cent of the nation's business firms.

One recent survey showed that the average radio station weekly reaches one out of every two homes in a market. Radio listening averages 16 hours a week, according to this survey, and another report revealed that teenagers listen to radio at least four hours a day.

One phenomena is the growth of the clock radio... more than 27 per cent of all radios made for home use in 1959 were the clock variety... and 41 per cent were portables. About 21 per cent of our radios are in the kitchen and 12 per cent in living rooms.

National Radio Month this year is something special—it marks radio's first 40 years of service to America.
