Dr. John W. Harris Of PC To Retire

DR. HARRIS

Dr. John W. Harris is retiring after 20 years as professor of English at Presbyterian College, President Marshall W. Brown announced today.
He closed this phase of his versatile career with the Monday commencement exercises, the date of his 65th birthday, but plans to continue as executive secretary of the National Beta Club. He and Mrs. Harris will move their residence to Spartanburg to be at the scene of his business interests.

Dr. Harris had submitted his resignation earlier in the year, as he approached retirement age, and the board of trustees passed a special resolution expressing grateful appreciation for his loyal and efficient service. He was designated professor emeritus of English.

Dr. Harris joined the PC faculty in 1941, a few years after he had organized the Beta Club to promote and recognize leadership, character and scholarship among high school students. Under his leadership, it has grown to a membership of some 80,000 in 18 states.

He came to Presbyterian College from the faculty of Wofford College, where he received his BA and MA degrees in 1916. He was awarded a PhD from the University of North Carolina with Phi Beta Kappa honors and served as an Air Force instructor in World War I.

President Brown, in announcing his retirement, said:
"Dr. Harris is a remarkably efficient organizer who had a sympathetic interest in the welfare of every individual student. He was a faculty colleague whose wide experience and constant loyalty continue to contribute much to the traditions of this college."
