Many people are learning a new appreciation of our railroads and are turning to them again for travel. The Southern Railway System is offering new low one-way and round-trip family bargains. Under the new plan the husband pays full one-way fare, the wife a half one-way fare; child 12-21, half one-way fare; child, 5-11, one-quarter one-way fare; child under five, free.

It doesn't take special attractions to get me on a passenger train. I've always loved them ever since I was a boy. I like nothing better than to ride in the cab of a locomotive.

Recently I had another locomotive ride when I traveled in the cab of the locomotive pulling the Southern's crack Crescent limited. There's always a thrill to it.

The cab of the modern diesel is even more comfortable than the modern automobile. Imagine driving a car down a smooth highway where you don't have to worry about steering.

According to statistics the railroad is our safest form of transportation. When you ride in a locomotive cab you can see and learn some of the reasons. Every employee of the railroad is safety conscious. Elaborate safety precautions have been taken. Both engineer and fireman occupy comfortable seats where there is no strain. While the locomotive is running, the engineer must keep a foot on a pedal something like an automobile clutch which is called the "dead man." If he takes his foot off this pedal, the train automatically stops. A whistle board stands by the track well ahead of each grade crossing.

It calls for four blasts from the whistle, two long, one short, one long. The engineer must be holding the whistle down for the last blast when he goes over the crossing.

Automatic train control is another safety feature. At regular intervals signal lights of three colors are mounted on top of a post—red, yellow, or green. If another train is in the section ahead between two signal posts, the light shows red. If there is a train two sections ahead, the light shows yellow. When the engineer enters either of these sections he must be alert and hold back a lever which gives him only a brief period to pass the signal. If he ignores this, the train stops automatically. The green light means all clear.

The Reading Railroad of Pennsylvania has preserved several steam locomotives. They are running weekly excursions with them called "Iron Horse Rambles." They are extremely popular. Why not take your children for a train ride?

If you don't want to fight traffic and hot weather on the highways this vacation why not try an air-conditioned train. I have nothing against other forms of public transportation, I just love trains.
