Dorn Says Farm Program Is Greatest Domestic Problem

Speaking to an enthusiastic gathering at Mountville on August 10, U. S. Congressman Bryan Dorn said that although the international situation with its threat of war is our greatest over-all problem, the farm program is our number one domestic problem. He pointed out that today only 11 per cent of our population live on the farm whereas only a decade or so ago the percentage was several times greater. The growth of the federal government's competing with private enterprise and its farm policy have accelerated the trend away from the farm and have encouraged communitism. Historically, people who gain their livelihood from cultivating the soil and those who live in small urban communities have been a stabilizing element in our society. They believe in law and order and have no inclination to listen to the blandishments of subversive rabble rousers. The communists are well aware of this fact and hence they try to destroy the farm people by legislation. There is no record that a mob bent on overthrowing the government by violence and intimidation has ever originated on the farm or in small communities. Mr. Dorn pointed out that the first federal farm program was drawn up by young brain-trusters from Harvard and Princeton Universities such as Alger Hiss, Nathan Witt, Dexter White and Frank Shea. These men were smuggled into government service by Felix Frankfurter and soon formed a cell in the Department of Agriculture. Most of them didn't know the difference between a billy goat and a mule or between a cotton stalk and a pine tree, but they did understand how to go about getting the farmer out of business. As the farm program operates today a few farmers are getting bigger but the vast majority are having a hard time making ends meet. In 1958 Mr. Dorn said there 358 cotton farmers in California who received loans of $50,000 or more from the government; in South Carolina there was only one farmer in this category. In Mississippi one farm corporation owned by British interests received a loan of more than $1 million. Instead of encouraging more people to live on the farm what we are really doing is paying those who live there to quit and congregate in the cities which are already over-crowded.

Mr. Dorn pointed out the weakness of the Social Security System in that it does not provide enough income for security. Its benefits will just about pay the grocery bill. A young man just starting out would build up a better income for his old age by investing wisely in stocks, insurance or land. Mr. Dorn was introduced by B. W. Crouch, Jr., and his talk was preceded by a picnic sponsored jointly by the Mountville Grange and the community.
