Soil Testing Gets Kick-Off at Meal Held Here Tuesday

About 110 Laurens County farm leaders and guests attended a soil testing program kickoff dinner at the Mary Musgrove Hotel Tuesday night.

M. L. Outz, Laurens County farm agent, presided at the meeting, at which Clemson College experts explained the program of obtaining samples of soil for testing at Clemson.

Clemson men appearing on the program were Hugh Woodie, leader in extension agronomy; L. P. Anderson, assistant extension agronomist; E. C. Turner, extension conservationist; Dr. H. T. Cooper, dean agriculture; and L. B. Massey, Piedmont of the Clemson school of mont District extension agent.

The dinner was sponsored by the South Carolina Plant Food Education Society. Speakers also included Fred McNatt, president of the society.

The biggest South Carolina farm problem is infertile soil, Mr. Woodie declared. He said that this state's soil is not fertile as that of some states. "We can produce twice what we produce now if we build up our soil fertility," he declared.

Mr. Woodie said that "if you will take soil samples and follow soil recommendations it will increase yields and income."

Mr. Outz said that those attending the dinner should take the leadership in urging other farmers to take soil samples. "You will not only be helping yourself but you will be helping Laurens County," he said.

Soil sample boxes will be available at key places throughout the county, Mr. Outz pointed out. They will be picked up by the county agent's office and forwarded to Clemson. Mr. Outz said that personnel of his office will be available for meetings held to encourage the taking of soil samples.

Here Saturday PC Opens Home Schedule Against Lenoir-Rhyne

The clash of two bowl teams here Saturday night will give Clinton a highlight football attraction as Presbyterian College and Lenoir-Rhyne renew a small college rivalry with national implications.

A near capacity crowd is expected for this 8:00 p. m. clash on Johnson Field for PC's home opener.

FOOTBALL TICKET SALES

Tickets to the PC-Lenoir-Rhyne game are on sale at all Clinton drug stores and at Johnson and Pitts Men's Shop, priced at $2.75 each for adults and $1.50 for students. Fans are urged to purchase early to avoid the game time rush. The ticket office at Johnson Field will be open at 6:30 p. m. as an added convenience.

Lenoir-Rhyne last year was ranked the number one team among the small powers of the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics prior to its post-season Holiday Bowl appearance. And Presbyterian rated in the number four spot enroute to the Tangerine Bowl.

It's another season now, and early, but the spotlight centers on this Saturday clash as the NAIA game of the week. From it could emerge the team most likely to succeed in small college competition this season. Certainly, the winner will step close to the top of the weekly NAIA ratings.

Both teams have served notice they expect to make a battle of it. Lenoir-Rhyne, with almost all personnel back intact from 1959's championship year, clobbered all ways sturdy Wofford by an impressive 30 to 6 count last Saturday. Presbyterian lost to the rebuilt Furman forces, 12 to 20, but not before the Hosemen had moved the ball even more on offense than their opponents.

There's added incentive for both of these little powers. Lenoir-Rhyne is still seeking its first victory over PC, having lost and tied two in the spasmodic six-game series that skipped last year. And the Presbyterian gridmen just naturally believe they can take the measure of this kingpin squad which was ranked above them in '59.

In addition to these leaders and assistants, there is a local board of 20 men and women volunteers who advise and carry out the National Camp Fire program with the assistance of standing committees such as program, leader training, etc.
