Chairman Joe Holland invites all members to attend

Brody addressed the board Thursday night, explaining the board's duties in connection with the county's move toward property revaluation.

Brody said there is a state law which requires counties undertake reassessment programs. He also said that if counties do not take the initiative and start the program, it will be forced on them, possibly by law suit from private citizens.

He said that 26 counties have established the programs or are preparing to set up a program.

Jr. Achievement Program To Be Organized Here

"It's one of the best community projects we could undertake," Dr. Fred Chapman said this week after attending a week-long seminar on the Junior Achievement program.

Dr. Chapman, chairman of the Business and Economics Department at Presbyterian College, last week attended a training workshop in Atlanta, Ga., for prospective new Junior Achievement organizations.

Dr. Chapman said, "This program gives young people an appreciation for free enterprise and the business world. It takes mature young people -- both boys and girls -- to participate and unless they're ready to make adult decisions, I don't think they'd be interested in this program."

"For those who are interested, this could be an enlightening experience."

Dr. Chapman said that local businesses will supply adult advisors on production, marketing and finance. The young people will set up their own companies, issue stock, and make decisions about their product and how they can produce it most economically.

The young people will meet for about two hours a week for about 32 weeks. During the two-hour meetings, they will operate their corporation and produce their product. Most of the sales for the product will come outside the regular meeting time, he said.

Each member of the corporation must own at least one share of stock. The stock will be sold at $1 per share after the young people decide on capitalization for the firm.

They will develop their own sales campaign and will offer commissions on the sale of their product.

At the end of the 32-week period, the corporation will be liquidated and dividends declared.

Dr. Chapman said the local organization now is forming a board of directors. A representative of the board will explain to high school students just what Junior Achievement means and what it can do for them. The interested students then apply for membership.

Chapman said, "We have had very good reception from the local business community. In fact, the idea originated from within the business community."

He said that only four other cities in South Carolina now have -- or are planning -- Junior Achievement programs. The four are Spartanburg, Charleston, Columbia and Greenwood.
