NOTHER blg cotton crop in 1927 doubtless will depress the market again as it did in 1923 and cause cot ton growing to be decidedly unproat able, according to H. P. This forecast was made by Mr. Stuckey in a lecture for the Radio Short Course over WSB, Atlanta and which was conducted by the Sears Roebuck Agricultural Foundation in cooperation with the Soll Improvement Committee of the National Fertilizer properly cured and baled, will find a ready market in competition with hay shipped in from other regions. Soy beans. velvet beans and cowpeas are splendid grain, as well as hay crops, and may be sold for seed purposes, as well as used for stock feed. Cowpeas also are in good demand for human food in practically all southern markets. These may be grown at a profit.

"The demand for peanuts for confectioneries and oil production is increasing annually, and a part of our cotton lands could be devoted to this crop at a profit. Any surplus of pea nuts not finding a ready cash market easily could be converted into pork by feeding them to swine. The more fertile soils of the coastal plains are well adapted to sugar cane for the production of sirup. This finds a ready sale in the south and east. Sorghum is valuable both for sirup making and stock feed. There are two distinct mar kets for sweet potatoes. The Jersey variety is especially adapted to harvesting in late summer and shipped promptly to northern and eastern markets. There is room for considerable expansion in the growing of early varieties of sweet potatoes for shipment northward, while the moist varieties are more in demand in the south These can be cured in storage bouses and sold during the winter as the market demands.

"Some of the profitable crops of the constal regions are spinach, kate and lettuce, to be shipped north in win ter. Farms located near industrial plants and manufacturing centers will find it profitable to grow limited areas of turnips, masturd and collards. This year should offer encouragement to the producer for many industries are being developed in the southeast, and this messics a ourger consuming public and latter markets for agricultural commodities."
