DISCOURAGING TIPS maglish Railroad Officials Trying to Break Up the Practice.

It was stated recently by several of-dcials of railway companies having termini in the metropolis that the question of the tipping of porters had been engaging the attention of the respectave general managers, says the London Times. The subject was one which Bristled with difficulties, in Smuch as the traveling public encouraged, rather than discouraged, the practice. In the rules and regulations for the observance of the staff of each at the railway companies there was a clause specially directed to the question of the acceptance of tips, which provided that any servant detected receiving gratuitles of any kind was liable to instant dismis Unfortunately, passengers were not aware of the existence of such a regulation or totally ignored it. If the public would only report cases of incivility on the part of porters on occasions when tips were not forthsoming, the railway companies would be in a position to deal more effectively with Mie question. The companies desired it to be known that the directors did not, as had been suggested by the men, take into consideration the Schley two numbers ahead of Rear Adamount a porter was likely to receive in tips when fixing the wage of an employe. The wages paid to the men were commensurate with the services rendered to the companies. The managers were, of course, well aware that at many of the larger stations a porter could easity earn, in the nature of tips, on an average at least f1 per

A KING'S EXECUTION CARMENT Vest Worn by Charles I. When He Was

Behended. From the London Standard: The sum of 200 guineas bid the other day for the "sky-colored vest" worn by King Charles L on the scaffold is not an exorbitant price for a raile at once authentic and ghastly. Nothing is lacking that might make a good Jacobite's flesh creep. The stains of blood have been religiously preserved by a succession of revalist owners, and it has been pointed out that of the thirteen buttonholes only twelve had been fastened. The top button had been removed, so that the filestrious vietim might more easily have his neck to the executioner. He nothing common did or mean. Upon that memorable scene, But with his keener eye, The ax's edgo did try." Such was the testimony of a republican poet, and there is no doubt that the sad dignity with which "Charles Stuart" comported himself in his last days roused qualins of remorse among some of those contemporaries who had been harshest in their judgment of his public policy. Admiration of the man went far to redeem the faults of the king, and with posterity he became at once the most sympathetic figure in the history of England -not even second to Mary Queen or Scots. And of her nobody will ever believe, let the Dryasdusts bring forward what documentary evidence they please, that she painted her face and wore false hair.

It is pretty certain, if the purchaser of King Charles' silken raiment ever thinks of allowing that precious posseasion to pass out of his family, that The Senate adjourned at 12.03 it would fetch far more than he has given for it. Placed in any museum it seers; the combination of royal associations with gruesome memories would be quite irresistible. The most superior person is attracted, though he may deny it, by such horrors as a book bound in human skin, or by instruments, like the Maiden of Nuremberg, which he knows to have been used for torturing real men and women to their death. This relish of bloodshed-as distinguished from mere love of adventurous deeds-has given vogue to whole schools of romancers; it helped to account for the sudden popularity of Mr. Rhier Haggard's tales, as it made the fame of Maurus Jokai. The and has to be taken into account. And the psychological interest of it is to show that we are not, in our feelings, so far removed from our barbaric an-

A Beauty of the Arctic. There is a beautiful bird called the rosy gull, very few specimens of which exist in any museum, and whose entire life is spent in the immediate neighborhood of the eternal ice that surrounds the north pole. A paper describing these curious birds was read at the recent meeting of the American Association in Boston by Mr. John Murdoch. They follow the advance of the ice towards the south as winter comes on keeping near the loose edge of the floating pack ice, and then retreat with it toward the north when of one bird made from those of an the summer sun begins to rice high upon the Arctic circle.
