North had the Treasury, the army, and the South had nothing to rely on but her handful of devoted patriots.

During those bloody four years, battles were fought, which ranked among the greatest world battles. Never was such fighting seen as at the battle of Gettysburg, since the days of the Great Napoleon.

At last the South made her bid for independence, and the United States was divided into two warring nations.

Today the South forms a part of the Union, and though the cause she fought for is a "Lost Cause," and though many of her bravest sons fell, yet she is proud of the part she bore in the struggle of the North and her sons were men and Americans.

THE LOST CAUSE. Since the beginning of the Civil War, "The Lost Cause" has been a subject of interest to the people of the South.

It was a subject of interest to the people of the South, and it is a subject of interest to the people of the North.
