Burning Cotton Absurd.

There has been a great deal of talk and many articles in the newspapers relative to the burning of cotton in order to thereby cause a rise in the price of the staple above its present lamentably low quotation. Two million bales, we believe, is the amount most generally selected for the sacrifice fires, and a rumor is even going the rounds that the burning had already begun in certain points.

The whole thing seems too radically ridiculous to have originated even with no other idea than perpetrating a joke.

In the first place, who is prepared to say with certainty that the burning of two million bales will accomplish the end desired? It will reduce the crop to 11,000,000 or 11,500,000 bales, but how do we know that anything like high prices would be paid on the basis of 11,000,000 bales. Last year the total, it must be remembered, was a scant 10,000,000 bales, not 11,000,000, when the price advanced as though it were going to 20 cents. So it would apparently be safer to destroy 3,000,000.

But there have been other years, many of them, when the crop was small and even smaller than that raised in 1902-3, and yet it was accompanied by no such generous prices as were paid last winter.

Hence, even though 3,000,000 bales of cotton should be consigned to the flames, we have no guarantee that it would send the price of cotton "booming," while we do know that it would utterly destroy at least $90,000,000. It cost even more than that, perhaps, to raise it. To turn in, then, and throw so much money in the fire would be to act like children. Better to hold it year after year, no matter what the loss in weight.

For it can be depended upon that the destruction of no given amount of cotton will force the remainder up to a price that will more than compensate for the money expended on the bales destroyed.

We love the man with the rose on his tongue, the man who sees the boy's dirty face, but mentions his bright eyes; who notices your shabby coat, but praises your studious habits; the man who sees all the faults, but whose tongue is quick to praise and slow to blame. We like to meet a man whose smile will light up dreariness, whose voice is full of music of the birds, whose hand-shake is an inspiration and his "God bless you" a benediction. He makes us forget our trouble as the raven's dismal croak is forgotten when the wood thrush sings. God bless the man of cheer. There is plenty of trouble here, but we need not increase it. There is a lot of dying done ahead of time.—Ex.

Governor Heyward has announced that he will not be an aspirant for further political honors. To a reporter he said a few days ago, "It was my ambition to be governor of South Carolina and to do something in that capacity for the people of my State. They have bestowed upon me the highest honor in their gift and have re-elected me without opposition. This it seems to me, was a mark of genuine confidence which I shall ever remember most gratefully. I have devoted my time, thought and energy to the welfare of the State and when I leave the governor's office it will be with the earnest hope that I will leave a record showing that I have served my State to some purpose. At the end of two years I expect to retire permanently from politics."

Mr. G. G. Alexander has recently been appointed United States Commissioner. This is the same position Mr. Alexander held several years ago and resigned to accept the Camden postmastership.
