knelt and prayed. No more brilliant, theatric scene was ever presented probably than that in St. George's Hall, when the Czar mounted the throne to read his speech to the Duma. The hall was crowded with an assemblage glittering with gold lace and sparkling with orders. The workingmen and peasant members of the House of Representatives formed the only sombre group.

The Czar, in a firm, steady voice, He said: The Supreme Providence moved me to call to my assistance in legislative work elected representatives of the people. In the expectation of a brilliant future for Russia, I greet in your persons the best men from the Empire, whom my beloved subjects chose from among themselves. A diffigult work his before you. I trust that love for your Fatherland and your earnest desire to serve it will insofre and unite you. I shall keep inviolage the institutions which I have granted. After the speech the silence was broken by a fond cheer, which was drowned in the strains of the national unthem, "that Save the Czar."

Many of the people's chosen repre-sentatives were sullen and slient. For the Czar bad uttered no word of amhesely for political prisoners. The Czav and his family at once re-

In this assemblage there were noblemen and other men of high station in evening dress sitting beside simple peasants or workingmen in the costumes of shops or viliages, turbaned Mussulmans and Buddhists from Bok hara, idolators from the Kirghiz steppes, orthodox priests in black easks. Catholic bishops in purple cassocks, Circussians, Armenians and Tartars from the Caucasus, Jews from the Buriants from Central Asia, Lithuanians and Esthonians from the Baitic Provinces; most of them in their
