Sermon to the Jews.

Dr. McConnell's sermon last Sunday to the Jews was a highly interesting one. In part he said:

Text—"This people have I formed for myself; they shall show forth my praise."—Isa. 43:21.

It is said that upon one occasion Frederick the Great turned abruptly to his Chaplain and asked for proof of the Bible in a single word, whereupon the preacher replied, Israel; and that Napoleon once made a similar demand upon the Archbishop of Milan who seeing Marshal Massena, a Jew, standing near, silently pointed to him in reply. But not only is the Jew a sufficient proof of the Bible, and a standing refutation of infidelity, but he is an unsolved and unsolvable problem except as explained by divine revelation. He is the miracle of ages, with a history running back 4000 years.

He has survived the Pharaohs and the Caesars. He has witnessed the downfall of Babylon, Carthage and Rome. He has shared in all civilizations, and forms a part of all nations, and yet he is today as distinct from other men as he was in the time of his greatest national prosperity. Other people when conquered are soon amalgamated with their conquerors. Immigrants from other lands are soon denationalized in America. The Englishman is a compound of Britton and Roman, Norman and Saxon, and everywhere. He has a pedigree before which the proudest cut-throats of others are but trifles of yesterday, and traces his lineage back to Abraham, the most illustrious man of the race. He claims kinship with Moses the greatest statesman and law giver the world ever saw, and with Solomon the wisest philosopher who ever lived.

It is to the Jew that the world is indebted for its only account of man's origin and destiny. With one hand he has unrolled the mystic scroll of the past, and with the other he has pushed ajar the door of the future. To him we are indebted for the Bible with all its precious revelations, and incentives, and promises. From his hand we receive the Ten Commandments which form the basis of all civilization and government. To him we are indebted for our inspiration in music, poetry and theology. It was David, the Hebrew harper, who struck the keynote of the world's sweetest anthems, and Paul the Jewish scholar stands at the head of earth's greatest theologians and grandest preachers. Yes, far beyond and above all else God himself became incarnate in the person of a Jew, and so there is a source in which all christianity today bows down in homage and adoration before a Jew! They are the men of destiny whom one thousand Czars can never destroy. To them we owe the priceless heritage of the past, and the inspiring hopes of the future, and although they have been scattered abroad for nearly 2000 years without a country or a government, plundered and oppressed everywhere, they have preserved both their identity and individuality and have made themselves felt as important factors in every department of life. Two of the world's greatest philosophers were Jews, Maimonides and Spinoza, and two of her greatest musicians, Rossini and Mendelssohn. It was a Jew who placed in the hands of England's sovereigns the scepter of India, and it is said the brainiest man in the Congress of the Southern Confederacy belonged to this remarkable people. The Jews are prominent in science, literature and art, and in the person of the Rothschilds stand at the head of the business world as earth's greatest financiers. They are a veritable "gulfstream" among the nations, in and among them all but identified with none, the "burning bush" of the ages, everywhere enveloped in the fire of persecution, but never consumed. Surely for a people thus remarkably preserved there must be reserved a destiny more than ordinarily grand and important, and when we turn to the Bible, our only source of information upon the subject, we find this conjecture unquestionably confirmed. All the prophecies with reference to their past, have been remarkably fulfilled, and so it is but reasonable to believe that those with reference to their re-establishment in the land of their fathers, and the restoration of their national glory will likewise be fulfilled.
