SEED COBN SELECTION.

Article L of Clemson College Empa-

corn for another year, the time to the common practice of securing his told at that time whether the ears er they have been produced on stalks which have been favored with an undue amount of fertilizer or distance. If seed are selected which have been grown under the latter conditions, they are not apt to produce large ears another year unless given a rather heavy application of fertilizer or more distance than necessary. Therefore, the seed ears should be selected from stalks which have grown under average conditions. To make this selection properly, it must first be decided which portion of the field represents as near as possible the average soil conditions of the farm. Then from blocky and healthy stalks which have not been favored with any undue amount of distance or richness in the sofl, the seed ears should be gathered. Before breaking the ears from the stalks, one should ascertain their size as near as possible. This can be done by carefully examining them with the hand, and if they seem to be of good size and well filled out at the tip they should be pulled. If the corn should be a prolific variety, it does not matter whether the top or bottom ear is selected so long as a good one is secured.

After having selected about twice as many ears as will be necessary for seed, all of them should be stored in a place free from mice and weevils. A few days prior to planting time, all of the ears should be shucked and only the best ones should be retained for planting. It is well to bear in mind that all seed ears should be free from mixture, heavy, of good size, have deep grains, well filled butts and tips, uniform kernels, and narrow spaces between the rows of grains, as the above points are conducive to larger yields and have a tendency to be exproduced when planted .
