

FIELD CROP INSECTS.

Cultural Methods of Same—Article LI of Clemson Extension Work.

This is the season of the year when cultural methods for controlling field crop insects pests must be seriously considered. Most of the pests with which we had to contend during the past season are beginning to make preparations for winter quarters. The cotton boll worm will burrow about 2 1-2 inches into the soil of cotton and corn land and then change to a chrysalis and remain during the winter. The corn stalk borer remains all winter, as a larva in the base of corn stubble below the surface of the soil. The black bill bug remains as a pupae in the base of the corn stubble during the winter. The cotton and corn root lice are protected by the rots in undisturbed fields and like the cotton leaf louse they maintain themselves on wild food plants in the early part of the year before the crops are up and in fall and early winter after the crops are harvested. Chinch bugs and the beetles of the southern corn root worms find winter shelter in rubbish, dead grass, and weeds that remains on the fields. It is therefore self evident that neglected fields during the fall and winter are the best "incubators" for the pests that are to menace our crops next year. If the same crops follow each other on the same land, the conditions for insect propagation are favored still more because their preferred food is placed right before them so that they need not even have to hunt for it.

These are the conditions, therefore, that if not given any forethought, will give us endless trouble next year. A system of fall and winter culture together with the planting of crops that will act as cleansers against goods that serve as food plants and which themselves have considerable immunity against insects, is the important question before the farmer right now. Among the plants that are relatively free from insect attacks are the vetches, cowpeas, clovers and rye. Here then are excellent plants to be used for cleansing cover crops.

The boll worm is controlled by winter plowing which breaks up or exposes his earthen cell. If the corn stubbles are plowed under in winter, the corn stalk borer cannot get out. To control bill bugs the infested stubble should be plowed up and destroyed. Cleansing crops destroy the weeds that support our root and leaf lice, and also destroys the places suitable for winter quarters for the chinch bugs and southern corn root worm beetle. If we take a bird's-eye view of all the recommendations made for controlling field crop insects together with the planting of cleansing crops, it resolves itself into rotation, deep fall plowing, and the planting of winter cover crops. These recommendations are in line with those of the leading Agricultural workers of the South. The methods of culture and the system of rotation may vary to suit the circumstances. In a nut shell the following is a typical rotation for the control of field crop insects on the average farm of the South:

Field 1.

Muleish Ways.

A case in Abbeville court was that of Eakin vs. Kennedy, concerning a mule trade. Eakin claimed that the mule was valueless otherwise than an acrobat. The jury, after mature deliberations, decided that a mule that wouldn't kick was not to be considered as a mule and rendered a verdict in favor of the defendant.

The Hermitage Cotton Mill, Camden, S. C., has resumed operations, after having been closed down for many months. While the mill was idle it was thoroughly overhauled and almost all of the old machinery replaced with new. P. L. West, the superintendent, says he has almost all of the mill houses occupied and will be able to run on full time from now on. — Textile Manufacturer.

Kick the Printer

In the city of Brooklyn, N. Y., there has been for many years a conspicuous signboard outside an office which reads, "KICK THE PRINTER."

Bibulous persons sometimes go inside to carry out the apparent request, but they discover that the printer is a gentleman by the name of Kick.

In every town there are persons who, if they do not actually feel like kicking the printer—the newspaper man—at any rate do a lot of kicking at the way he conducts his paper.

Please DON'T kick the printer; he is doing the best he can.

And what he does for the town and community, despite his occasional mistakes, may be a great deal more than the kickers themselves are doing. Did THAT ever occur to you?

We are all neighbors in this town. What helps one helps the others. What hurts one hurts the others. Every community is a mutual benefit association, whether organized or just running wild. The printer is a charter member.

If you had no printer—no newspaper—how would you like that? Do you know what happens to towns that don't support a newspaper? Nothing happens. Nothing ever happens in a town like that. As soon as things begin to happen in a town the newspaper comes along and tells about them.

The newspaper boosts the town. It records progress and offers suggestions, by the editor or the readers, as to further progress. Every copy of every issue advertises the town. This is all free advertisement. It costs the town nothing. It costs the people nothing. It is a part of the business.

In view of this fact, which nobody can dispute, it is much better to pat the printer on the shoulder now and then or to speak kindly of him than to kick him.

NO; DON'T KICK THE PRINTER.
