

ACTRESS WILL WEAR A WONDERFUL GOWN HERE

Miss Janet Waldorf, in "Graustark," to Exhibit Costume Made With Rare Jewels From the Orient—Has Traveled Extensively in East.

Miss Janet Waldorf, who will be seen at the Camden Opera House on Wednesday, Oct. 25, in Baker and Castle's production of "Graustark," adopted from George Barr McCutcheon's novel, is one of the very few actresses who have made a tour of the world.

The East had special attraction for Miss Waldorf, and she made up her mind that she would see Japan, China and India. Soon after completing her studies for the stage she organized a company and sailed for Honolulu. They spent several weeks there and then went on to Japan. Her's was the first company to give a performance in English in Tokyo. They played "As You Like It" first in a theatre and then in the open air. Aside from the members of the English and American embassies, the audiences were made up of natives, and they played to crowded houses.

After playing in Yokohama, they went to Shanghai, where they played at the Country Club in the Bubbling Well road. The club is the most exclusive organization of Englishmen in China. They also played in one of the Chinese theaters. In Hongkong the company played "Romeo and Juliet," "Twelfth Night," and "Ingomar," and then sailed to Manila.

From Manila Miss Waldorf and her company went to the Strait Settlements, and gave the first performance ever given in English at Banganora. They made several sight seeing trips into the interior, playing at the English club houses, sometimes living almost in the jungle and could not be abroad after dark because of the tigers. After Manila, followed Rangoon and Calcutta, where they played six weeks. They spent the rainy season in Mussoorie, in the hill district, giving frequent outdoor performances.

From Calcutta, Miss Waldorf took her company to Delhi, where they gave two performances in the theater owned by Ballywallah, a Hindoo actor. The educated classes among the Hindoos are earnest students of Shakespeare and Ballywallah had been giving Shakespearean plays for years.

After leaving Delhi they spent two weeks in Ceylon and then sailed to Australia, spending several months in Australia and New Zealand. From New Zealand they went back to Shanghai, Hongkong and Manila, and from Manila back to Japan, and after several weeks they sailed for San Francisco. They have been away for nearly three years.

Miss Waldorf is a born collector, and delights in "picking up" rare and beautiful objects. While on her tour around the world she secured many beautiful and serviceable articles, including ornaments, jewelry and dress goods, and as the character she assumes in "Graustark," the Princess Yette, admits of elaborate dressing she has omplayed a few of her "finds" in forming a creation of magnificent splendor.

The clasps which confine her long ruby mantle at the throat are in reality Hindu bridal ornaments, which rarely find their way out of India. Only the high caste maidens are permitted to wear them, and they do so in a way that would drive a Western bride to distraction. After two or three thicknesses of bridal veil has been adjusted, an enormous button, bigger than the famous "cart wheel" silver dollar, is placed over each ear, completely hiding it from view, while a third is fastened directly in the center of the crown. Both tradition and sentiment forbid that these three should match. Thus, one must be of brilliant, another of emeralds, the remaining one is a mixture of both.

Green, deep, lustrous green, would seem to be the mascot color of India, and Miss Waldorf brought with her one of the famous "good luck" dresses in which the desired tint is supplied by beetles' wings. The burnished surfaces would seem to indicate that live insects furnish forth these trappings for India's gowns. Indeed, Miss Waldorf says that it is rumored that the cruel practice goes further still. Not only are the unfortunate thus denuded, but they are turned adrift in their crippled condition.

However, one forgets such matters in marvelling at the wonderful skill with which these gleaming, filmy bits are inserted among the gold thread tracery. By what process they are preserved is another of these craft secrets which the artisans of the Orient keep strictly to themselves.

The fabric upon which the decoration is given is one of these clinging Eastern stuffs that look as if a good puff of wind could annihilate it, yet it is encrusted thickly all over the front with a mysteriously symbolic pattern that requires thousands of yards of gold thread and quantities of wings.

Golden vines and scrolls also encircle the glistening wings that make the waist a thing of beauty, and a wider border pattern about the hem of the gown, carries out the same idea in elaborate embroidery. Yet taken up in the hand its weight is almost imperceptible.

It is in the last act of "Graustark" when Miss Waldorf appears in all the regal splendor of her court costume that she excites the envy of the feminine portion of the audience and many a longing glance is cast at the supreme art of the dressmaker as exemplified by the magnificent creation worn by Princess Yette.

COTTON CATERPILLAR

Clemson Expert Recommends Paris Green to Destroy the Pest.

Clemson, S. C., Oct. 14.—Reports from various sections of the state indicate that the ravages of the cotton caterpillar are decidedly general. The old cotton has suffered relatively little from its attacks, but it appears from reports in many instances that the late cotton has sustained rather considerable damage. In its feeding, the caterpillar eats preferably the young leaves, buds and squares of the cotton.

The eggs are laid on the under side of the leaves of the cotton, usually on the larger and lower leaves. These hatch out into the striped caterpillars seen so abundantly, and becoming full grown—"web up," forming a chrysalis or cocoon from which emerges an olive to clay-yellow colored moth about 1-2 inches from tip to tip of wings, with a leaden colored spot on each fore wing. The eggs which are overtaken by frost perish and hence we find that the bulk of these forms pass the winter in the chrysalis or pupal stage. Fall plowing of affected areas will be of great destructive damage to the wintering forms.

The best remedial measure is the application of Paris green at the rate of 2 to 2 1-2 pounds per acre applied in the dry form in the early morning when the foliage is moist. A one inch board, about 8 inches in width, about 6 inches wider on each end than the width of the cotton row, and trimmed in the middle so as to make it easily handled before a man on a mule is the chief piece of apparatus needed. A one or two inch auger hole should be bored in either end so as to fit the rows, and under these should be tacked an 8 ounce duck bag. The Paris green can then be poured into these bags, and the opening closed. If intelligent labor is used, by experimenting a job on the board can be determined sufficiently strong to put out the required 2 to 2 1-2 pounds to the acre. Should this not be the case, it would be better to use cheese-cloth bags and dilute the Paris green to about 10 times its volume with land plaster, flour, or cracked lime. The caterpillars taking this substance into their digestive tracts are poisoned by the arsenic contained in it, and death follows as the result. Paris green may be obtained from almost any drug store at about 25 cents per pound.
