NEW SCHEDULE

On Northwestern Railroad to Be Inaugurated Sunday.

Sumter Daily Item.

The Northwestern Railway of South Carolina will, beginning next Sunday morning, install passenger train service between Camden and Wilson's Mill. There will be two trains a day. These will be known as passenger trains one and two—number one being southbound and number two being northbound.

With the inauguration of this new passenger service the present accommodation freight trains will be taken off the lines between Sumter and Camden and Sumter and Wilson's Mill and the trains running between these points will be full passenger or full freight trains. The trains will consist of two coaches—one for white and one for colored passengers, and will be expected to make good time between points.

The schedules for the two trains will be beginning Sunday, February 11th, as follows: Number 2, northbound, leaves Sumter at 11 a. m., and arrives at Camden at 12:30 p. m.; No. 1, southbound, leaves Camden at 3 p. m., arriving at Sumter at 4 p. m., and leaving Sumter at 4:40 for Wilson's Mill, where it will arrive at 7 p. m. Train No. 2 then leaves Wilson's Mill at 9 a. m. on Monday morning, arriving at Sumter at 10:50 a. m.

While this schedule of trains will be a serious inconvenience to some, who had found the present schedules on the accommodation trains very convenient, especially those persons living between here and Camden, it will prove more convenient to those persons living between here and Sumter and in that section of this and Clarendon counties.

Plan Has Worked Well.

Philanthropists and others who have been identified with the project to provide food for those school children who, through force of circumstances, might otherwise often go hungry, will read with interest of the success that has greeted a similar movement to feed the children of the poor in England. Not only were free meals provided in cases of school children actually needing food, but records were kept to determine how much good the extra feeding was doing.

The report shows that the first gain an ill-nourished child makes on being properly fed is often in height. There was also a satisfactory increase in weight, although this increase was not in proportion to the increase in height. The youngsters, after being well fed for a week or so, became better scholars. They seemed to take more interest in their lessons, and they gave their teachers far less trouble than formerly.

In dealing with the report the Lancet says that encouragement should be given to the plan for the feeding of ill-fed school children, since there has already been proof that such feeding results in a rapid gain in height and a gain in weight.

Odd Greetings.

The unconventional salutation "Hello" which is used by the average westerner would be considered absolutely discourteous and rude by the average foreigner of Asia. Interpreted into English, the salutation of the Turk is "Be under the guard of God"; the Arabian with his usual reference to "Allah" says: "Thank God, how are you?" The greeting of the Persian is in these well wishing words, "May your shadow never grow less." The familiar form of saluting a friend among the Chinese is, "How is your stomach?" while the Egyptians, "How do you perspire?" seems still more odd. A literal translation of the greeting of European people gives us a combination something like this: Dutch, "How do you are?"; Swedish, "How can you?"; Russian, "How do you live on?"; Polish, "How do you have yourself?"; Italian, "How do you stand?"

This Gas Plant Lives and Grows.

There are two varieties of gas plant. One is a manufacturing establishment where coal is converted into gas for illuminating and heating purposes. The other variety is a real growing plant called the fraxinella. Few know why the fraxinella is called the "gas plant." This is because at certain times it releases a volatile oil that actually ignites if allowed to come in contact with a lighted match.

The fraxinella is also noted for its fragrance and longevity if not disturbed. One plant in a New England garden is doing its best to outlive a third generation, and elsewhere a clump is still flourishing after no less than thirty-seven years on a grave—one of the most difficult of places for a perennial to keep up a long struggle for existence, let alone a normal life.

Most Curious Railway.

The Darjeeling-Himalayan railway is one of the most curious in the world. It is of two-foot gauge, and on account of the steepness is full of loops, curves and spirals, many of the curves having only 70 feet radius. Some of the gradients are as high as one foot in 28. A special type of locomotive had to be made for it at Manchester. This locomotive was required by the specifications to be able to travel on reverse curves not exceeding 60 feet radius, with only 20 feet length of tangent between the curves. The engine consists of a frame supported at each end by four wheeled bogies, each of which is described as a miniature locomotive without boiler. The boiler is carried on the frame between the bogies.

The Origin of Ear-Rings.

A correspondent writes to the Pall Mall Gazette of London to correct a statement that the ears were not pierced for ear-rings till the seventeenth century. The most ancient ear-rings in the museums, he says, were certainly worn in pierced ears. There is tradition, that when Sarah, jealous of Hagar, vowed to dye her hands in the latter's blood, Abraham saw the situation by boring Hagar's ears and letting Sarah insert silver rings, so that her vow was fulfilled. The rings, however, lent such splendor to the girl's dusky cheeks that Sarah soon adopted them herself, and this was the origin of ear-rings.

Shakespeare's Gauntlets.

Dr. Howard H. Furness, says the Independent, is the fortunate possessor of a precious relic that very greatly interested Thackeray—no less than a pair of genuine gloves worn by William Shakespeare. They are dull buff gauntlets, the deep cuffs being embroidered with gold. The actor John Ward gave them to Garrick in 1769. Garrick's widow presented them to Sarah Siddons. Mrs. Siddons bequeathed the gloves to her daughter, who gave them to Mrs. Fanny Kemble, from whom the Shakespearean scholar received the unquestioned precious possession.

The Perfume of Flowers.

According to the investigation of a German botanist, out of 4,300 species of flowers cultivated in Europe only 420 possess an agreeable perfume. Flowers with white or cream colored petals are more frequently odoriferous than others. Next in order come the yellow flowers, then the red, violet, the blue, and finally the white, whereof only 13 varieties out of 303 give off a pleasing perfume. In the whole list 3,308 varieties are offensive in odor and 8,300 have no perceptible smell, either good or bad.

FAMOUS AMERICAN INDIANS

ALBERT PATYSON TERRINE

UNCAS.

"My heart is not my own; it is yours. My braves are not mine, but yours. Command, and I obey. I will trust the English before I will trust mine own people. The Indian that slays an Englishman shall die by my hand."

The man who made this speech of loyalty to a group of grim-visaged Puritans was Uncas, sachem and hero. Nor were his words mere idle boasting. He had already proved their truth, and was yet to prove it in a far more dramatic way.

Uncas was born about 1588. He was a sub-chief of the Pequot nation, and up to middle age had had no adventures especially well worth relating. But in 1635 he headed a party of malcontents against the Pequot sachem Sassacus. In the fierce little war that followed Uncas was expelled from his "nation." But he took with him a band of loyal followers and formed a new tribe which he called the "Mohegans" (an ancient name of the Pequot). He made himself chief of the Mohegans, and conquered for them a fine stretch of land near where Lyme, Conn., now stands. Then he turned his attention to avenging himself on his old enemies, the Pequots.

A Deed of Vengeance.

The Mohegans were not strong enough to tackle them single-handed, so he signed a peace treaty with the English settlers of New England, and in 1637 joined the colonists in their expedition against the Pequot nation. Uncas guided the soldiers to the Pequots' chief stronghold, a village fortified by high wooden palisades. So fiercely did the English and Mohegans assault this town that all but fourteen of its Pequot inhabitants were slain. Then up and down through the Pequot country Uncas led the attack, until the whole "nation" that once had cast him out was subdued. In reward Uncas received a large slice of the Pequot lands. When the war was actually over he threw himself heart and soul into an effort to save the survivors of his crushed enemies from punishment at the hands of the English. So eagerly did he interfere to rescue the Pequots that the English declared him a traitor and he narrowly escaped with his life. But Uncas quickly proved his fidelity to the English, and did so in such emphatic fashion that the Pequots deemed him a double traitor and plotted to murder him.

Uncas swiftly avenged this murder plot by swooping down upon Squasson, the Connecticut river sachem, and laying waste his villages. Next he found himself involved in a quarrel with Miantonomoh, sachem of the mighty Narragansett nation. Miantonomoh had been accused of conspiring to massacre the white settlers. In 1640 and again in 1642 the Narragansett sachem had been arrested and brought before the Massachusetts magistrates on this charge and had had much trouble in clearing himself. Miantonomoh dared not attack the white men, but wreaked his spite by invading the country of their allies, the Mohegans. The Narragansetts, 1,000 strong, marched into Uncas's territory, destroying all in their path. Uncas could scrape together barely 500 men to meet the invaders. The two forces met near the Yantic river falls. Uncas strode forth between the two little armies and shouted to Miantonomoh:

"We both have many brave men at our backs. Why should many of them die in our private quarrel? Stand forward, oh Miantonomoh, and fight me, hand to hand. And let the battle's issue rest on our combat!"

Miantonomoh answered: "My men have come hither to fight. And they shall fight!" Then he gave the signal for battle.

Battle and Victory.

A terrific conflict followed. By martial skill and utter reckless courage Uncas defeated the Narragansetts—double the number of his own force—and captured Miantonomoh. Instead of dealing with his fallen foe in usual fashion, he carried Miantonomoh before a council of Massachusetts elders, who promptly condemned the captive to die. Uncas's own brother was permitted to strike the death blow. All the local tribes now combined against the Mohegans, and but for the aid sent him by the English Uncas must have been overwhelmed. As it was, he fought for years like a tiger against his allied foes, and held his own against them. Thomas Leffingwell, a settler, smuggled provisions to him once, when in 1656 he was besieged by the Narragansetts. Uncas, in gratitude, gave Leffingwell the tract of land now occupied by Norwich, Conn.

Uncas lived on until 1682, dying at the age of ninety-four. To the end he refused to embrace his white allies' religion, and was described by Massachusetts clergymen in 1674 as "an old and wicked, wilful man." Uncas had all the true Indian cunning and cruelty; but he was honest, loyal and fearless—one of the foremost savages of his century.

Hotel Clerk's Observation.

"There are two classes of arrivals who ask you to register for them," said a hotel clerk. "One is the woman with tight gloves who really cannot write. The other is the man who arrives after 11 p. m. and who says 'Just register (his), old man, will you?' 'Don't carry this guy and his baggage on my record. I couldn't hold a pen.'"
