MURDER AND SUICIDE OCCURS AT WESTVILLE

Westville, S. C., June 7 — (By Telephone to The Chronicle) — On Wednesday night at this place Oscar Wright shot and killed his wife and then turning the weapon upon himself ended his own life.

Wright and his wife lived in Camden where Oscar had been employed at the oil mill, but they were both raised near Westville. From what can be learned their married life was not a happy one, and the woman left her husband and came to her former home here. Wright followed his wife and upon meeting her the tragedy occurred. The weapon used was a pistol.
The coroner is holding the inquest this morning.

It is said there is no doubt that the negroes own bullet ended his life, but when found his body had many bullet holes in it, and it is supposed to have been the work of relatives of the dead woman.

FAMOUS AMERICAN INDIANS
BY ALBERT PATSON TERNINE
"EMPEROR" M'GILLIVRAY.

"The Spaniards are devils, and the biggest devil among them is the half-Spaniard, half-Frenchman, half-Scotchman and altogether Creek blackguard McGillivray."
Thus wrote Gen. James Robertson, the Tennessee pioneer. The man he referred to was a half breed Creek war chief who went by the Scottish name of Alexander McGillivray. He had other names and titles. For instance, he called himself "emperor of the Seminoles and Creeks." He bamboozled both Spain and the United States into giving him commissions as major general and persuaded England to make him a colonel. He drew pay from all three countries, playing one against the other and being loyal to none.

McGillivray was born in the Creek "nation" in 1740. His father was a Scotch emigrant of good birth, his mother a half-breed Creek princess. In the son's veins ran the blood of four races—Indian, Spanish, French and Scotch. Underneath the polish and learning he received, he was always a typical Indian of the worst sort. His father's family planned a white man's career for the lad. They gave him a splendid education; then found a position for him in a Savannah counting house.

A Flight From Civilization.
But the tame life of civilization wearied him and he went back to his mother's people. His education and natural genius soon raised him to the rank of chief, not only of the Creeks, but of the Seminoles and Chickamaugas, too. This triple power put him at the head of fully 10,000 warriors and made him lord of a domain larger than many European kingdoms. Small wonder that he took the title of emperor, surrounded himself with a royal court and was accompanied everywhere by a retinue!

When the revolutionary war broke out the British made him a colonel. This title, and the gay uniform that went with it, delighted McGillivray's barbaric soul. Nor was the extra pay displeasing to him. He fought for the English throughout the revolution. Georgia therefore confiscated all his property in that state. In revenge for this he waged war on the white settlers in the south and west. When the United States and England signed a peace treaty, in 1783, McGillivray began to look about for new employment. Spain—then master of Florida—sought alliance with him. For a goodly sum he became a Spanish agent, with the title of general, and used his tribal power for Spain's advancement. Then, 1790, he consented to go to New York for a personal conference with President Washington. He made the journey in imperial state. At every city along the route there were crowds and music to welcome the "Emperor." All this put him in a good humor. He readily made a diplomatic and commercial treaty with Washington, consenting to act as United States agent, with the rank of general and a salary of $1,200 a year. He also received $100,000 indemnity for the land that Georgia had confiscated from him. Although he then took oath of allegiance to this country, he sent word to his Spanish employers that he should continue to look after Spain's interest just the same. In view of such loyal services the Spaniards raised his salary to $3,500 a year. This, with his yearly $1,200 from the United States and his tribal properties, added to the money he could earn by grafting and his income as partner in a large southern commercial house, made him a very rich man.

Spain, Great Britain and the United States were not upon the friendliest terms in these days. Indeed, in the south their interests were forever clashing. Yet McGillivray had enough tact to keep his name on the pay roll of the three countries and to give more or less satisfaction to all of them. He also grew daily more powerful and secure in his office of "Emperor," using white men and Indians alike as pawns in his successful game of politics and finance.

Past Master of Treachery.
Though in the sworn service of the United States, he did not cease his bloodthirsty raids on southwestern settlers. Nor did he ever let his oaths of allegiance to any nation interfere with his personal interests and plans of vengeance. It has been said of McGillivray: "He was an instance of a powerful intellect absolutely divorced from moral principle."

In his declining years McGillivray took pleasure in giving a statesman-like education to his nephew, a youth who was one day to blaze a bloody trail in history under the name of Red Eagle, and whose life story has been told in an earlier article of this series.
McGillivray escaped punishment for his countless offenses and died rich and honored, February 17, 1793. He was buried with Masonic honors in the garden of his business partner's house at Pensacola, Fla.

Reciprocity.
"Every husband ought to make his bride a regular allowance from the start," said Senator Dewey at a wedding reception in New York.
"That is but just," he continued, "because from the start every bride finds that she must constantly make allowances for her husband."—Blue Bull.

SCRAPS OF HUMOR

Defending a Fad.
"This fad is the limit."
"What is it?"
"New York girls are having the pictures of their gentlemen friends photographed on their finger nails."
"Nothing remarkable about that."
"No, why?"
"Certainly not. Any girl who thinks much of a young man likes to have him always on hand."

The Secret Out.
"Have you seen Timson lately?"
"No."
"I thought not. He was wondering only last night if you had left town."
"Confound that fellow. I'll never borrow another dollar from him as long as I live!"

A Sure Sign.
"I know as soon as met Mr. Jones that he was a married man."
"Did he talk to you about his wife?"
"Never mentioned her."
"Then how did you know at once he was a married man?"
"He was such a good listener."

In Which Sense, Maudie?
Alice—It's mean of you to tell people that when Jack kissed me I didn't resent it.
Maud—I didn't dear. On the contrary, I said that when he kissed you on the cheek you held it up against him for quite a while.

UNNATURAL FEELING.

"Clubman—Shay, M'ria. I feel as though I was waiting all 'round you! Wonder what's got into me?"
Mrs. Clubman—You ought to know. You poured it in!

Speaking of Wood Pulp—
Some day there won't be wood enough to make a paper bag.
And all the paper mills—how tough!—Will straightway chew the rag.

Puzzling.
"There is an important question before the city youngster."
"Will you be so kind as to tell me what it is?"
"This: How can Santa Claus get into the house through a steam pipe?"

Contrary Effects.
"Funny, isn't it, about a prima donna's voice when it comes to contracts?"
"In what way?"
"Her liquid notes always turn into solid cash."

Nothing in a Name.
The Stranger—Queer place for a factory—right in the heart of your business section.
The Native—Yes, that's where they manufacture the pure country sausage.

Exceptions.
"The pass system has been generally abolished, hasn't it?"
"Not so generally. The corporation I've invested in has not abolished it about their dividends."

Apparently.
"There is a great deal of polite fiction going around."
"Yes, indeed. Most of our politeness is fiction."

Natural Prophecy.
"What is the best way to make a play a howling success?"
"I suppose, to try it on the dog."
Prudent Man.
"You say he has money to burn."
"Yes, but there is nothing else he dreads so much as fire."
