OLIVER
Typewriter
The Only Writing Machine
in the World that Successfully Typewrites Print.
17 Cents
A DAY

The PrinType Oliver Typewriter, which has crowded ten years of typewriter progress into the space of months, is now offered to the public for 17 Cents a Day!
Offered at the same price as ordinary typewriter—payable pennies!
The commanding importance of PrinType is everywhere conceded.
For who does not see what it means to make the world's vast volume of typewritten matter as readable as books or magazines? The PrinType Oliver Typewriter is equipped with beautiful Book Type, such as is used on the world's printing presses.
PrinType is distinguished by marvelous clearness and beauty. It does away with all strain on the eyesight which the old-style outline type imposes. PrinType puts life and style and character into its typewritten correspondence. It makes every letter, every numeral, every character "as plain as print."
The complete story of PrinType has never before been told. Here it is!

The Real Story of PRINTYPE
The idea from which "PrinType" sprang resulted from the success of our type experts in equipping a typewriter used in our offices to write "The Oliver Typewriter" in our famous trade mark type just as the name appears on the outside of the machine and in all Oliver publicity.
The beautiful appearance and the marvelous clearness of the reproduction of our "ebony" trade-mark type, disclosed the possibilities of equipping The Oliver Typewriter to write the entire English language in shaded letters!

We worked for years on the plan and finally succeeded in producing, for exclusive use on The Oliver Typewriter, the wonderful shaded letters and numerals known to the world as "PrinType."

The Public's Verdict
That the public is overwhelmingly in favor of PrinType is impressively shown by this fact:
Already over 75 per cent of our entire output of Oliver Type-writers are "PrinTypes."
The public is demanding PrinType in preference to the old-style type.
Within a year, at the present rate, 90 per cent of our total sales will be "PrinTypes."
Thus The Oliver Typewriter, which first successfully introduced visible writing, is again to the fore with another revolution in improvement—PrinType, the type that prints print!

To Corporations:
The Oliver Typewriter is used extensively by great concerns in all sections of the world. Our "17-Cents-a-Day" Plan is designed to help that large class of typewriter buyers who want the same typewriter that serves the great corporations, but prefer the easy system of purchase.
The masses want The Oliver Typewriter because it stands the test of the largest corporations.

HELP THE NEWSPAPER.
A Few Rules to Observe When Writing for Publication.

Nearly every person has occasion at times when he feels called upon to write some article for publication in the newspaper. A lot of time he or she is disappointed at not seeing the article in print. To insure your article appearing in the newspaper you wish it to, observe these rules and most of the time your piece will be printed.
First, and most important of all, send the news when it is fresh. No paper can afford to publish news after it is known to everybody in the community. Don't wait a week or so before writing what you have, but send it right off.
Second, write on one side of your paper only, and do not abbreviate or leave for the editor to fill in.
Third, do not write editorials, or in any other way give your opinion about the matter you are writing of. The editor of the paper is paid to do that.
Fourth, always be sure that the article you send in comes under the head "news." For example, after a death has been published a long article upon the good character, and other good attributes of the dead, is not news, it is an obituary, and has to be paid for. The newspaper always sympathizes with the bereaved but they can't publish personal articles free.—Ex.

STORKS ASSORTED WORK.
Leaves Baby, Fourteen Ducklins, a Calf and Pair of Kids.

Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 24.—E. A. Chase, night agent for a taxicab company, didn't mind it at all when the stork made occasional visits to his home at Fifty-seventh street and Virginia avenue, but when the old bird began to make daily trips Chase thought it was time to call a halt. Wednesday night an excited voice over the telephone told Chase that the bird had just arrived and left a fine boy for the family. Chase was happy as could be.

Thursday morning as he hurried from the garage to the house to see the new arrival he heard the family cow bellowing. He turned aside a moment and found that the bovine stork had been around and left a lusty young calf.
"Good enough," said Chase.
Friday evening as he started to work, Spec, the pride of the egg-producing plant in the Chase backyard, trotted proudly across his path with a fine family of fourteen, which the hen stork had brought around that day.

Chase began to get worried. Prolonging around in the barnyard was Nanny, the children's pet goat, and with her were a pair of kids that just had arrived.
"What next," he exclaimed.
Now Chase always comes in from the front. He fears to look into the back yard.

FAMOUS AMERICAN INDIANS
ALBERT PATSON TERRONE MADOCKAWANDO.

Madockawando, sachem and war chief of the mighty Penobscot tribe, had a grievance. He had often declared that he and his people could live on terms of peace and good fellowship with the English colonists. He had ordered the Penobscots to preserve such peace, and he loyally relied on a treaty his adopted father, Assammasqua, had long ago made with the settlers. And now those same settlers were behaving toward the Penobscots in a way that the wildest stretch of imagination could not construe as friendly or even peaceable. It is not pleasant to be forced to eat one's own words of praise; and Madockawando rebelled at the task. Instead, he broke into history with a series of dramatic deeds which made his name a terror along the Maine frontier.

Madockawando was born in Maine, about 1630. His people's lands for the most part lay to the east of the Penobscot river and were a part of the much-harassed province of Acadia. The French had formerly owned Acadia, lost it to the English and, in 1667, recovered it. The English, however, still claimed the territory between the St. Croix and Penobscot rivers. Boundary disputes arose; and in these disputes Madockawando and his Indians suddenly found themselves involved. Between the French and the English, they were as the luckless cloth between the blades of a pair of shears.

The English especially raided them and seized much Penobscot land, and there was more than one conflict between savages and settlers. The Indians' crops were destroyed, their hunting grounds overrun. The Penobscots could not understand. They sent ambassadors to Boston to protest against these outrages and to demand fair treatment. The ambassadors were seized, disarmed and thrown into prison. The English took, indeed, some perfunctory steps toward reconciliation. But, as they could make no definite promises of restitution or of better conduct, affairs only grew worse. Madockawando made a fervent appeal to the English commissioners at a formal council wherein he set forth his grievances, and ended by asking:
"What are we to do for winter supplies, now that our crops are gone? How can we buy powder and shot? Shall we die of hunger or appeal to the French for aid?"

The commissioners evaded the questions and advised him to wait until they could confer with the colonial governor. But the sachem replied: "We have already waited. Now we expect our answer."
As the commissioners could—or would—grant him no satisfaction, Madockawando threw aside his peaceful intentions and went on the war-path. During his wholesale ravages he seized sixty settlers and held them as hostages for his own imprisoned envoys. But these white prisoners did not suffer as did most colonists who fell into hostile Indians' hands. Madockawando forbade all torture or other ill-treatment of prisoners and would permit no unnecessary brutality in any of the war's campaigns.

Every English settlement in that part of Maine was destroyed, and the whole region was terrorized by Madockawando. The English, to curb the fighting spirit they had aroused, tried diplomacy where force had failed them. In 1673 they consented to a new treaty whereby the Maine settlers whom Madockawando had driven away might return to their farms on the condition of paying rent to the Indians for the land they had once sought to seize by right of strength. This was a triumph for Madockawando, and a few years of peace followed. But other warlike influences were soon at work. The notorious Baron de St. Castine married one of Madockawando's daughters, and thus helped not only to draw the Penobscots toward the French, but to strengthen a sort of feudal power he himself was building up.

A War of Vengeance.
The English governor, Andros, sailed to Penobscot in 1688, burned and plundered St. Castine's "castle" there and destroyed his fort. Madockawando flew to arms in his son-in-law's behalf; and a new border war set in.
The chief event of this war was Madockawando's attack on the town of York, Maine, in 1691. He burnt the town to the ground, killed 77 of its inhabitants and carried away 85 prisoners. This was but one of a number of raids wherein Madockawando, with his braves or with their French allies, made the frontier a place of ever-present peril. He was paying his debt of grievances against the English with usurious interest.
In 1698 Madockawando died. Some historians believe he was treacherously murdered, with other Indian chiefs, by Capt. Pasco Chubb during a "peace conference" at Pemaquid. He was altogether the most humane savage of his century and one of the bravest of all Indian war-chiefs.

Sporadic Case.
Mr. Dorkine—Yes, she's an English fox terrier, with a pedigree a yard long.
Dog Catcher (in disguise)—Well, she still seems to need a muzzle about two inches in diameter around her snout, but I think I'll take her. You will find her tomorrow, sir, at this pound.
