TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS,
 In a short while we will have a number of subscribers whose subscriptions expire. The recent postal ruling will not allow us to mail the paper to you if you are over a year in arrears, and to save us sending you a statement or the annoyance of receiving a "dun," as some of our friends choose to call them, we would be glad if those in arrears would call and settle.

The Cotton Market.
 Census Agent W. F. Russell's report to the government of cotton ginned shows 3,872 bales in Kershaw county from the crop of 1913 prior to September 25th, as compared with 5,643 bales prior to September 25, 1912.
 Last Saturday's sales in Camden went around 650 bales and the price ranged from 13 1/2 to 13.95.

Look Out For Them.
 The good price of cotton will bring the agents of high and low degree to see the farmers with all sorts of things to sell, and farmers should remember that agents and companies with furniture, crockery and household articles are not going to give them away nor will they sell them below their value. As the Spartanburg Journal says, they are after the money every time and they will make it out of you. Beware of these plain simple contraptions on one side of a small sheet of paper. When you sign it you bind yourself to what is on the other side, the print is generally so small that you can scarcely read it. That is the dangerous part of the contract. The farmer should never talk business to strangers. When they come around ask them for references and then tell them to call at some future day. They will give you up as a hard case. In dealing with distant concerns get their financial rating. There are many fraudulent companies which advertise cheap goods. Let them alone. Of course there are reputable houses in all large cities, which will deal fairly with you and it will be safe to order from them when you need articles not kept in the home stores. With cotton above twelve cents, there will be a considerable amount of money scattered over the country, and it will be a fair bait to attract these irresponsible agents who have the best things in the world and they are offering you the only chance you will ever have. Always turn down men who are selling below cost just to introduce their goods. They are frauds and deceivers. Orangeburg Times and Democrat.

The Right and Wrong Way.
 Of all forms of advertising there is nothing equal to an attractive display ad in the local paper to produce the desired results. Many a business man has tried every other plan of advertising only to recognize at last that a paper read by the community is the best form of telling the public what one has to offer. At one time, signs, big and little, erected in almost every conceivable place, were largely used, but their principal effect was to disfigure the landscape. The ad in the local paper possesses every advantage that other forms of advertising have and many more that they cannot possibly possess. It is not read when people are whirling thru space in an auto or speeding along in a railway car, but at one's leisure in one's own home. It is read by nearly everybody and its form can be as frequently changed as one may desire. There is a right way and a wrong way to advertise, as in most other lines.—Orangeburg Times and Democrat.

FIND SAFETY IN PRISON CELL

Many instances on Record Where Criminals Have Taken Refuge in Jails and Penitentiaries.
 The recent escape of a patient from the Poughkeepsie Insane asylum, followed by his begging to be taken back because New York was "too noisy," is no droller than many kindred instances that have come to the attention of institution authorities in the past. It is a well-known fact that inmates of the state prisons often ask to be allowed to remain permanently where they have served a number of years sentence. They declare that it is actually more like home to them than any other place in the world where they have been. As the authorities have no power to continue them as prisoners at the expense of the state the released convicts will often commit another crime in order that they may be resentence to a stay in their former prison home. It sometimes happens that criminals wanted for an offense that bids fair to lead to their capture and a long prison term will deliberately break a law that will lead only to a light sentence. They do this at some distant point and elude the detectives searching everywhere but in prison for them. They have been known to enlist under false names in the army or navy, much as they detest the strict discipline to which they must conform. They argue they are safer in the army for three years than being shadowed constantly by detectives.
 Others who often feel they are safer in custody are "squealers" who fear the knife or bullet of the "gang" outside. This was plainly shown in the Rosenthal-Becker murder case, when Rose and Weber and Schepps trembled lest the accused gunmen's friends should be able to reach them and carry out revenge threats.

No Sense in Either.
 Two men entered a train at a small station out west and took seats facing an elderly gentleman. They fell to telling hunting stories with great animation and many oaths.
 Noticing that the old gentleman was an interested listener, one of the men spoke to him and asked whether he, too, were not a hunter, with a story or two worth hearing.
 The old gentleman thought he could tell one, and this is what he said:
 "One day I thought I would go hunting; so I took my tin-pan tinder-box gun and went up into a tin-pan tinder-box woods on the side of a tin-pan tinder-box mountain, and I waited a tin-pan tinder-box long time; and then I saw a tin-pan tinder-box fine buck coming toward me, so I put my old tin-pan tinder-box gun to my shoulder and fired. And that tin-pan tinder-box buck fell right in its tin-pan tinder-box tracks; and it was the finest tin-pan tinder-box buck I ever killed." After a pause, he said: "How do you like my story?"

"Oh, the story is all right, but I don't see what all that 'tin-pan tinder-box' has to do with it."
 "Well," replied the old gentleman, "that is just my way of swearing."
 "I don't see much sense in swearing that way," said the other, with manifest disgust.
 To which the old gentleman responded, "There is as much sense in my way of swearing as there is in yours, young man."—Youth's Companion.

Calendar in One Sentence.
 How often in the course of a year does a man who has no calendar near at hand ask himself the question, On what day of the week does such and such a date fall?
 A perusal of the following sentence will soon convince him how he may know all he needs with very little trouble:
 "Said I, I dwelt for fifteen weeks in London with a robber."
 Each word represents a month in order. Thus, "said" stands for January and "robber" for December. The number of letters in the word gives the date on which the first Saturday in the month represented occurs.
 Take, for instance, June 14, 1913. June being the sixth month is represented by the word "fifteen," which has seven letters, indicating June 7 as being the first Saturday. Then seventh and seven days gives the 14th as being the second Saturday of the month. Having thus seen on which day of the week the month begins the rest is easy.—Stray Stories.

Never-Settled Questions.
 The familiar saying that nothing is settled until it is settled right expresses only a half-truth. Questions of general and permanent importance are seldom finally settled. A very wise man has said that "short of the multiplication table there is no truth and no fact which must not be proved over again as if it had never been proved, from time to time." Conceptions of social rights and obligations and the institutions based upon them continue unquestioned for long periods as postulates in all discussions upon questions of government. Whatever conduct conforms to them is assumed to be right. Whatever is at variance with them is assumed to be wrong. Then a time comes when with apparent suddenness the ground of discussion shifts and the postulates are denied. They cease to be accepted without proof, and the whole controversy in which they were originally established is fought over again.—Senator Root, in North American Review.

Wheels Within Wheels.
 Mrs. Crawford—I was so glad to find her out when I called.
 Mrs. Crabshaw—I know you didn't like each other, so I told her when you were going to be judges.
