JOE HOUGH, J. H. CLEMENTS. W. F. NETTLES, Commissioners of State and County for Kershaw County, S. C.

By RONALD ROSS.

Marvin was in his later thirties. College bred, he had gone West after making a failure of his life. He had no ties. Nobody in the world cared for him. He wanted only to bury himself in the heart of the forest and to forget.

One day, as Marvin rode through the woods, he came upon a slip of a mountain girl bending over a brook. Her bare feet were as brown as berries, her arms nut brown, her face flushed with confusion as she raised

They fell into an easy conversation. Her father was a small sheep rancher living in the valley. She had no other relative or friend except-Jim.

Jim was her lover, Marvin gathered. He rode on, vaguely disconcerted. The thought of the girl recurred to him again and again.

He met her once more, twice-then the day came when he rode down to the valley to buy his supplies. And he saw the girl at the door of the ranch building.

"Joe Cooper's gal," the storekeeper told him. "She's sort of queer. Old Jim Bates is crazy to marry her, but he's in his fifties and the gal don't care for an old man. Guess her father will make her, though. He's eager to get rid of her-shiftless lot, them Coopers."

Marvin, returning, saw a group of three at the door of the house. The two men were arguing angrily with the girl. Marvin thought he saw tears on her cheeks. He pulled in his horse; then slowly rode away. It was no business of his; he could not interfere.

But the days hung drearily on his hands, and he felt a vague longing to see the forest girl again. About a week later his wish was gratified.

She was coming along the trail, subbing, and when she saw him she stopped dead and hid her face in her hands. Marvin was at her side in a minute

"You are in trouble," he said. "What can I do to help you?" Then in sudden realization, "You were coming

She nodded dumbly. "I can't stand for it in the valley," she said. "I won't marry Jim Bates. I won't. I hate him. All my life I have wanted to live in the mountains, away from folks."

The stammered, foolish words were almost inarticulate. Marvin understood the passion behind them, the soul longing for freedom, groping for refuge from the petty tyranny of life. He placed his arm around her. She looked up at him, and their lips met.

"I, too, love the mountains," he said. Would you come and live with me-I mean, if we were to be married?"

She nodded. They strolled together. along the trail, and at last be found happiness. Before she left it was arranged that she was to meet him and they would ride to the nearest town and find a minister.

That night he dreamed that he was pursuing Laura through a vast, smoky land, a wilderness with no other living being in sight; yet she was running from him toward some unknown danger, and he pursued, eager to save

He gasped and sat up. Through the window of his cabin he saw a lurid light that seemed to fill the sky. The room was filled with smoke.

He hurried into his clothes and ran to the stable. The horse was whinnying, fearful of the fire that seemed to be creeping nearer. Marvin saddled him and rode at a gallop into the woods. At the edge of the crest he saw that the whole valley was ablaze. He tethered his horse securely and ran down the valley. He saw smoldering homesteads, fallen trees, blackened rooftops of deserted houses. Then he was at the Cooper ranch. The house was still blazing.

He ran through the little frrigated patch and hammered furiously at the door. It fell crashing beneath his blows. The interior was empty. Thank God for that!

The girl must have joined the fugitives in the mountains at the other end of the valley. There was no more to be done. Marvin turned slowly away-and then he was aware of the girl crouching beside the little trickle of water, as she had crouched by the brook that day. She was crouching, weeping, and in a moment he had her in his arms.

"You are not hurt?" he cried, Where is your father? Your-"I don't know," she sobbed. "When awoke the house was beginning to burn. I dressed and hurried out here. I think—I think they have gone with the settlers toward the mountains."

"They left you to burn!" exclaimed Marvin, in horror.

She laid her hand on his arm. "I heard them calling for me," she said. But I hid here. Tomorrow I was to have married Jim."

"And now?" asked Marvin, bending over her.

"Now, I just can't. I can't. Leave me to die.'

He caught her in his arms and carried her up the valley, over the smoldering ruins of the little settlement. When they reached unburned ground he set her down and walked beside her, holding her to him. Her hair, unloosed fell over him. They were together and content, immeasurably content, and nothing else mattered.
