EVILS OF ADENOIDS.

These Growths are a Real Menace to the Health of a Child. Adenoids are growths that develop backward at the back of the throat, through the nostrils, and are often called "meat." They are a source of health danger, and if not removed should lead to a permanent and permanent growth of the adenoids. It has been proved that adenoids cause a child to be dull, nervous, and irritable, and to be unable to breathe through the nose and throat. Adenoids also cause a child to be subject to various diseases, such as influenza, measles, and whooping cough. Further, if he gets any of these diseases they are likely to be severe with him and leave him even worse afflicted. Cold, fresh air breathed through the nose is needed to prevent adenoid growth. It is needed also to prevent adenoids returning after an operation. Fresh air taken in through the nose prevents as well as cures adenoids.

MOST SENSITIVE NERVES.

The Two That Can Cause the Greatest Agony of Pain. Which part of the human body is the most sensitive to pain? A sharp definition must be drawn here between irritation and pain. Irritation is not pain, but only a frequent cause of it. Thus a crumb lodged in the larynx near the vocal cords produces violent irritation and prolonged coughing, which often result in actual pain. So, too, an insect or speck of dust in the eye sets up violent irritation and inflammation, followed by acute pain. Of the surface of the body the finger tips and the end of the tongue are most sensitive. For instance, a burn on the fingers is much more painful than one on the back would be, while one on the tongue would be more painful still. Deep wounds are not painful, as a rule, save as regards the surface. Injury to parts not exposed by external injury is a matter of the fifth nerve, the sensory nerve which supplies the skin of the head and face with the most intense. It has been proved that a needle pierces the skin of the face with less pain than it does the skin of the back. This is due to the fact that the fifth nerve also carries the pain impulses from the face to the brain, and it has been proved that it has a greater capacity for pain than any other nerve in the body.

What Makes Business Success. There is always a principle in business on the man who does his work painstakingly, says J. O. Armour in the American Magazine, "with care, precision and finality. He is the man who will be trusted with more and more responsibility, up to the limit of his capacity. The man who informs himself inadequately about his firm, its methods, its policies and its products, who does his work so well that it only needs follow him up to patch the ragged edges, is on the safe, sure, and shorter road to a livelihood."

The Usual Remedy. Boston had been studying his grand father's case, which was very much wrinkled. "Well, Bob," said the old gentleman "do you like my face?" "Yes, grandpa," said Bobbie. "It's an awfully nice face. But why don't you have it ironed?" New York Times

Her Idea. "What buying cigars for your husband?" "I shouldn't think you'd encourage him in the filthy habit." "I'm not. I'm buying them to discourage him." Detroit Free Press

Logic. Aboard one Alfred They say that steady dripping of water if went away a stone. Preamy Pete-Jes' think then, woid happen to a man's stomach by pouring glassfuls into it? A Race at the Aero Club

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

Down at Wellington they've got the aeroplane fever. There's a concern that has made a machine with a lot of safety appliances that is especially fitted for amateur aeronauts. The women have taken up the fad the same as the men. They've organized a club with first rate starting grounds, and although it's all brand new, there are a dozen members who own their machines, and in good weather some of them are flying all the while. Those who haven't the planes sit on the clubhouse porch with opera glasses in their hands watching the fliers and flirting. A race between two individuals, Beverly Yorke and Jim Springer, took place not long ago, on which there was a lot of money placed. It wasn't a fair race, but there was nothing that came within the rules as being foul. A 200 mile course was laid out, starting from the clubhouse. It first went to Arlington, then south to Jonesville, then southeast to Merryman, then northeast to Hilton, then straight west to Barrington, then to the clubhouse. The fliers were to go over a certain chain spruce in each town, except Jonesville, where there was a big factory, and they were to pass above the 200 foot chimney that belonged to it. Yorke was to start westward and Springer eastward. The one who got back to the clubhouse first was to be declared the winner. As to the fliers observing all the rules, this was secured by a club member being stationed at the different points they were to pass over. The machines, being merely for pleasure, were not especially powerful. There were machines with strong engines in the club, but this race was limited to the pleasure class. It wasn't expected that the race would be made in less than three hours. At 10 o'clock the club grounds were full of members and guests to see the race, and a number of machines were flying about, dashing hither and thither, rising, ducking and doing different stunts. One of these belonged to Kate Winton, who in the air topped every other woman member for flying and on terra firma topped them all for flirting. She had every man in the club by the ears, and it was generally conceded that when she undertook to bring a man to his narrowness he might as well come down at once. Yorke was the favorite at odds of five to four. At least, these were the odds up to the day before the race. But that night they suddenly changed to two to one on Springer. The queer thing about it was that no one could find out why this change should have come about. There were rumors about Yorke not being in a condition to race or his machine having been found wanting in some particular, but they were just rumors and there was no proof to back them up.

At 11 o'clock the two machines were to get out on the starting ground, the one pointed east, the other west. The racers took their seats, and half a dozen minutes later starting for each machine at the same moment. As they passed the spectators they were flitting about to see the fun started off in different directions, either to intercept the racers or to take some central point where they hoped to keep the machines in sight by means of glasses. Kate Winton's last victim was Jim Springer. She had been seen on the clubhouse porch during the evening before the race spooning with him, and it was expected by their observers that she would keep in touch with him in the contest to encourage him. But in this they were disappointed. She followed neither of the fliers, hovering over the club grounds and by signs communicating with those below how the race was going. When the racers had been out a couple of hours she was seen to fly away in the direction of Merryman and was soon out of sight. When she came within seeing distance of the fliers they had met and Yorke had passed the halfway point greatly ahead of Springer. Kate made a bee line for Yorke, who had started westward and was nearing Hilton. He had met his opponent so far ahead of the point he should have been and felt so certain of winning that he was not pressing his machine. Kate sailed up within hearing distance. "Oh, Mr. Yorke," she called, "I'm so glad!" "Glad about what?" "You're going to win." "That's very nice of you." They sailed along in company for a while when something seemed to go wrong with Kate's machine. It careened first on one side, then on the other. "I'm afraid I'm going to fall!" she cried in a voice of terror, and, true enough, she went down rapidly till she struck the earth, but managed her machine so well that there was no absolute drop. Yorke was too much of a man to leave her in distress and followed her, finding her lying on a state of collapse. Well, to make a long story short, Kate kept him ministering to injuries that were not serious till he had lost the race. But he came out ahead in the game of love if he lost the race. He refused to say a word about what Kate confessed was a frame up, remunerating those who had lost money backing him and otherwise showing that he was a thoroughbred. This won over Kate, and instead of Yorke tumbling to her she tumbled to him.
