MAKES LEAGUE AN ISSUE.

Governor Cox's administrations.

Sandwiched between a delegation from Middletown, O., which carried a large banner, "Jimmie's Boyhood Friends," and the Butler county delegation was a handful of marchers from Jacksonboro, Governor Cox's birthplace. Their banner said "Our Jimmie."

Chairman White, of the democratic national committee, opened the program of the notification ceremony of Governor Cox, democratic presidential nominee, with a brief address. He stated he was "the happiest man alive," today and also expressed pride that he had been a democrat for the last eight years.

The invocation of Rev. William A. Hale, of the Reformed church, was a plea for peace. He prayed that the Almighty might "crown with success the leader who will bring our nation out of awful peril and disaster of the war into a world of peace."

After playing of the national anthem by the Cox band, Mr. Roosevelt was presented to the throngs as "the next vice president" and was given an ovation.

Senator Robinson then delivered his address of notification.

"This day Dayton sends a message to Marion," Senator Robinson began.

"A few years ago Cox's army marched on Washington. Another army, Jimmy Cox's army, will advance and take the White House in November."

Senator Robinson's remarks drew frequent cheers and applause. They were prolonged when he declared Governor Cox's nomination was not won by "midnight combinations nor plutocratic cabals" but by untrammelled judgment of the San Francisco convention. Cheers came from district throngs under trees and from those across the race track oval.

Long cheering greeted Senator Robinson's denunciation of republican senators for their "nagging" attacks on President Wilson and the senator's charges that they had blocked peace.

"That's the stuff," was shouted at the senator as he whacked the republicans.

When Senator Robinson declared that the treaty of Versailles "must be ratified" to secure peace, another wave of applause burst forth. More cheers followed his opposition to a "reactionary" president. The crowd laughed and cheered when he predicted Governor Cox would carry the fight to the republicans and not have a front porch campaign.

Governor Cox was given an ovation when Senator Robinson concluded at 4:40. The amphitheater crowd rose and cheered for nearly a minute, with throngs standing in the race concourse joining. The governor read his address with clear, sharp enunciation.

In his address Governor Cox militantly championed the league as proposed by President Wilson, with interpretations insuring good faith and understanding, and denounced what he termed the dishonorable proposal from Senator Harding, his republican opponent, for "a separate peace with Germany."

League or no league, the democratic nominee declared, is the issue between the two parties—"the supreme issue of the century," he said.

"The question is," Governor Cox declared, "whether we shall or shall not join in this practical and humane movement. President Wilson entered the league in our name. Senator Harding, as the republican candidate for the presidency proposes in plain words that we remain out of it. As the democratic candidate I favor going in."

"The first duty of the new administration will be ratification of the treaty," Governor Cox said, predicting that friends of the league would rally to elect a senate with the requisite majority for ratification.
