

Double-Barreled Service

WHEN you buy IHC machines, you also buy the Service that goes with them—the co-operation that exists between us and the International Harvester Company, and which we intend to continue with you. We expect to hold your confidence in the IHC line by furnishing the best implements, machines and farm operating equipment on the market.

We render to you a double-barreled Service in not only supplying you with first-class goods, but in seeing that these goods are kept in perfect running order long after the original sale is forgotten.

Our moral obligation does not stop with the original sale, but you can hardly expect us to assume any responsibility for the successful operation of IHC machines if you buy imitation repairs of inferior quality instead of buying genuine IHC Repairs.

We sell only genuine IHC Repairs made by the Harvester Company, and which are made of the same materials as used for the original machines. No imitation equals the genuine. Play safe!

SPEED IN NEWS SENDING

Recent Invention, Called the Teletype, Delivers 50 Printed Words a Minute.

The fastest machine ever invented for transmitting news events is called the teletype.

While news by ordinary telegraph in the Morse code came in at the rate of thirty-five words a minute, the teletype printed the messages at the rate of fifty words a minute.

The teletype is a simple, compact instrument which prints the messages on a strip of paper one-half inch wide, similar to the ordinary ticker "tape."

Its inventors assert it will operate for long periods without adjustment or attention beyond supplying it with paper and ink. It is said to be so simple it can be operated by any one with an elementary knowledge of electricity and mechanics.

Any reasonable number of receiving stations may receive news by its use from one central transmitting station. These may either be connected all on one wire or a number of wires radiating from a central station may be used.

The same principle is used in the teletype as in the simple Morse telegraph, only by omitting a series of clicks the movement of the keys causes the machine at the other end of the wire to print proper letters. Instead of sending out dots and dashes, which require skill and training in transmission, the operator merely presses a typewriter key and the receiving machine prints the required letter.

A small motor, such as is used to supply power for many modern office appliances, operates the teletype. The rolls of "tape" on which the news is printed are large enough to receive from 15,000 to 16,000 words before replacement.

Flattery.

It is impossible to tell the whole truth to an average human being and still to remain on terms of friendship with him. There is little friendship without make-believe. If two men are close friends, you may take it that they have been pretending to a considerably higher estimate of each other than they would set down in a perfectly honest diary.

It is not necessary that they should deliberately lie to one another, but they must discreetly conceal a certain amount of the criticism that is going on all the time behind the bones of their skulls.

What is said in a spirit of truth is set down to malice. Can a man be your friend if he steals the crown from your head? Can he be your friend even if he steals a single jewel from your crown—especially the paste jewel? We have all—the greatest and the meanest of us—paste jewels in our crowns. Will a true friend point them out to a world that is already over-much inclined to scoff? Or will he not rather organize a clique that will pretend to be dazzled by diamonds?

Man is not only a realist. He is also a lover of romance. He dreams of what he would be quite as often as he deplores what he is. He cannot help being attracted by people who make his dream appear true. There are some men who are such intense egoists that they can believe in the truth of their dreams without any assistance from other people. Southey agreed that his "Madoc" was "the best English poem since 'Paradise Lost.'" There was no need to tell him so; he knew it already.—New Statesman, London.

Unconquerable Souls.

The soldier who sent his people the tunic he had worn in battle and wrote from the hospital, "You will observe that there are nine bullet holes in it, but I was awfully lucky, only five of 'em hit me," has a rival in an Ohio boy of nine, whose cheerful acceptance of the "bludgeonings of chance" are thus instanced:

"My life has been a very lucky one," he wrote in a "composition." "When I was three years old I fell downstairs and cut my head. When I was five years old I was looking at some hens and a dog bit my leg.

"When I was eight I went with my brother in a carriage, and the horse fell and threw us out of the carriage; my brother lit on his feet and I lit on the horse's back.

"Last year I was playing and ran into a wagon and cut my eyebrow, and it has left a mark.

"One day I went into a slaughter house in Chillico and a big sheep ran after me and knocked me down and broke my arm.

"I have had a very happy life."

The Lure of Eame.

"What makes you keep to your nefarious trade after so many promises to reform?"

"Well," answered Bill the Burg, "I never had no education much; an' at the same time I'm jes' as anxious as anybody fur a little intellectual recognition. I keep thinkin' that if I stick at it a while longer maybe I'll be wrote up in all the papers as a 'master mind.'"—Washington Star.

Knew Him.

"Huh! Just look at Bikins—heets over head in debt again."

"Why, he looks mighty prosperous—driving a new car and dressed up like a show window."

"Yes—that's why I know."
