

Double-Barreled Service

WHEN you buy IHC machines, you also buy the Service that goes with them—the co-operation that exists between us and the International Harvester Company, and which we intend to continue with you. We expect to hold your confidence in the IHC line by furnishing the best implements, machines and farm operating equipment on the market.

We render to you a double-barreled Service in not only supplying you with first-class goods, but in seeing that these goods are kept in perfect running order long after the original sale is forgotten.

Our moral obligation does not stop with the original sale, but you can hardly expect us to assume any responsibility for the successful operation of IHC machines if you buy imitation repairs of inferior quality instead of buying genuine IHC Repairs.

We sell only genuine IHC Repairs made by the Harvester Company, and which are made of the same materials as used for the original machines. No imitation equals the genuine. Play safe!

RUSS FEAST DAY

Pretty Ceremonies Described by American Traveler.

Singing and Dancing by Peasant Girls and Boys Chief Feature of the Occasion—Survival of Primitive Customs.

It was the Feast of Transfiguration, and from all the countryside around came the poor, the crippled and the aged. Again and again we heard the tapping of a cane and a plaintive voice asking alms for Christa, for the Christ's sake. Yanishev and I dropped a few kopeks into the bags they thrust before them. The women followed with large pieces cut from the big black loaves, while Ivan in each sack solemnly deposited a great green cucumber. This year cucumbers were scarce, as it was from Ivan a true gift of love. But whether we gave cucumber or bread or kopeks, back to each of us came the plaintive sing-song blessing of the beggar. Even the roughest, poorest Russian peasant is moved to profound pity by the spectacle of human misery. His own life teaches him the meaning of pain and privation. But they do not dull his sympathy. They make him more sensitive to the sufferings of others.

Now from the farther end of the village came the strains of music. There was a chorus of young voices accompanied by the thrumming of the balalaika, the clanging of cymbals and the throbbing of the tambourine, a kind of tambourine. Clearer and clearer came the music until suddenly around the corner of the church emerged the procession of players and singers. The girls were in the gay rich costumes of the peasants, and the boys wore smocks of green and orange and brightest blue, belted by cords with tasseled ends. The instruments were in the hands of the boys. The girls sang in response to the preceptor. He was a clean-looking, tousel-haired lad of seventeen, one of the last to be drafted to the front. In a clear, lusty voice with an abandon of emotion he sang an old folk song, adding new verses of his own as he strode along.

Three times they circled the village green, and then gathering on the grass before the church, they sang and danced till morning. The rush and joyous fling of the dancers, the flaming, colored costumes in the light of the pine torches, the laughter and snatches of song rising out of the dark, the young lovers with their caresses frank and unshamed, the church bell at intervals crashing like a great temple gong, and the startled birds wheeling overhead made an impression of primitive energy and beauty. I was carried back across the centuries to the days when the race was young and the men drew life and inspiration directly from the soil.—Albert Rhys Williams in Yale Review.

In the Limeright.

Wagons are treacherous devices. My last experience with one was in a traffic jam just before I reached the busiest corner in town. I did not know that the loose I gave the wagon had done any damage to either of us, and so, when I swung into the main intersection I planned a perfectly snappy turn.

Around came the steering wheel and I felt it lock. I felt for the brake, but in my excitement struck the gas and began circling the traffic cop at breakneck speed. He dodged me at least three times before I stopped, the exact center of downtown attention. Then he regained his breath and raised his voice for all the world to hear.

"If you are finished with this grand exhibition," he advised, "please go somewhere else so the traffic can get by."—Exchange.

Necktie Banks Now.

The latest thing in coin-carrying devices is reported by the woodmen who are drifting into Virginia, Minn., in increasing numbers. Instead of the old scheme of carrying their stake in their woolen socks, loose in their pockets or in a wallet, the lumber jacks and miners now carry it in their neckties. They insert the bills in the lining of the necktie, pin the tie and then tuck it in the front of their shirt. The advantage lies in the fact that one has his bank directly in front of him at all times. Incidentally, more woodmen are wearing neckties this year than ever before. Philadelphia Record.

Houses for Scotland.

Scotland is undergoing an almost senseless agitation for more and better houses, and the inquiries are more numerous than ever for American lumber, hardware and machine tools. With all her war loss Scotland needs more than 100,000 new homes. In many cities six and eight families have been living in small dwellings, sometimes one or two families in a room. The Scottish program for 1920 calls for 10,000 houses.

Famous Holliston Elms.

Elms at Holliston, Mass., planted about the year 1747 have been nominated for a place in the Hall of Fame of the American Forestry association at Washington. They may have been six or seven feet in circumference during Washington's time.

The Idea

"The number of the slow competitors that is able to do it," says the press, "is still going to be the standard that is what angel cake generally turns out to be."

GET FORECASTS BY WIRELESS

Kansas Agricultural College Makes Advance Wireless Forecast for Farmers With 24 Other Probabilities.

The Kansas Agricultural college has announced that it will furnish the weather forecasts to every Kansas farmer by wireless telegraph. The farmer will be required to install an antenna wireless set with which to receive the forecast. These sets cost about $25 each and can be operated by any person. They cannot be used for sending messages for any considerable distances but they will receive the powerful messages of the big plants. The forecasts are to be sent out at 9:55 each morning under a standard code and on the wave length of 375 meters, short enough for any amateur set to take. This wave length is also long enough and the college plant is powerful enough so that the message will reach every point in the state. The forecast will be sent at the rate of 18 words a minute and then repeated at 10 words a minute. The service is to be given free to every farmer, high school, or to any other person or institution having a wireless set. The high schools in the small communities are to distribute the forecast to the banks and stores and to the telephone companies. The knowledge of the probable weather is of considerable importance to farmers during the harvest and haying season, and to stockmen during the winter, for they can make preparations for feeding and sheltering stock upon knowing of an approaching storm.
