Double-Barreled Service

WHEN you buy IHC machines, you also buy the Service that goes with them—the co-operation that exists between us and the International Harvester Company, and which we intend to continue with you. We expect to hold your confidence in the IHC line by furnishing the best implements, machines and farm operating equipment on the market.

We render to you a double-barreled Service in not only supplying you with first-class goods, but in seeing that these goods are kept in perfect running order long after the original sale is forgotten.

Our moral obligation does not stop with the original sale, but you can hardly expect us to assume any responsibility for the successful operation of IHC machines if you buy imitation repairs of inferior quality instead of buying genuine IHC Repairs.

We sell only genuine IHC Repairs made by the Harvester Company, and which are made of the same materials as used for the original machines. No imitation equals the genuine. Play safe!

ACES' PET, SAD LION

Cub Adopted as Mascot by Yankees Now Sorry Sight.

Sentiment Prevents Paris Zoological
Garden Keepers From Putting End to Grief.

Paris.—The lion cub which was adopted as a mascot by the Lafayette Athletic Club of New York, the first of the American lions to come to light and die for France in the war, now is a melancholy spectacle in the Paris zoological garden, but the keepers refuse to let him die because of the sentiment attached to him in connection with the American fighters.

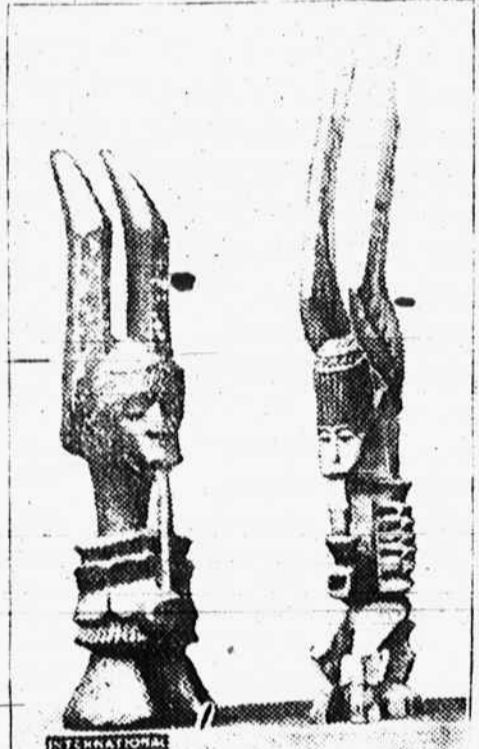

One eye is missing, much of his mane is gone, he seems decrepit with age, and if met in the desert, his appearance would inspire nothing but pity. The indignation of some members of a society for prevention of cruelty to animals has been aroused by his moribund appearance.

"Why don't you chloroform the poor little fellow?" a visitor asked of the keeper the other day.

"What do you mean by 'old fellow'?" retorted the keeper. "That cub is only four years old. He is a victim of the war. If that lion had been a dog he would have been shot."

ALIEN GIRLS SOLD, IS CHARGE

Highest Bidders Get Armenian Immigrants, Immigration Commissioner Says.

Fresno, Cal.—The arrest of seven Armenian girls and a prominent Armenian merchant of Long Beach near here, paved the way for which Armenian girls are brought into the United States and sold to the highest bidder, according to George W. Moore, United States immigration commissioner.

Moore said in one case a young Armenian, inspected the girls held for sale and paid a deposit on one who posed him.

The commissioner said the case was typical of many in which the girls were sold as marriage slaves.

Wily Diplomat Saved Lord Beaconsfield From Bad "Break" He Had Contemplated.

Curiosity says a London correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor, is frequently expressed as to how the prime minister gets along in his conferences with foreign ministers. It is understood that, though he can make out the purport of a limited passage in the French language, he never had the opportunity of acquiring fluency in the spoken tongue.

In this respect he finds a precedent in the case of Lord Beaconsfield. When he went to the Berlin congress in 1878, he made known to his faithful secretary his intention of addressing the conference in French. Morny, who had suffered scraps of his chief's colloquial French was aghast. In despair he applied to the British minister at Berlin for assistance. Otto Russell lived up to the occasion. In casual conversation with Lord Beaconsfield he mentioned that he had heard a rumor that he intended to address the plenipotentiaries on the following day in French. "That would," the wily minister said, "be a grave disappointment. They know that they have here in you the greatest living master of English oratory, and are looking forward to your speech as the intellectual treat of their lives." "Dizzy" immediately saw the reasonableness of this objection and all his speeches during the sessions of the congress were in English.

COULDN'T LEAVE EMILY OUT

Peculiar Reason Why Emily Spinster Just Had to Attend the Funeral.

Word has come to the mid-Victorian lady that an old friend of her mother's had died suddenly in her home in Maine. It was her duty to break the sad news to two elderly spinsters, cousins of the dear departed "auntie."

She found Miss Susan at home, tending to her pet canary. Miss Susan is 78, but spry and alert, ready for any emergency. Miss Emily, five years older, was out motoring with a kindly benefactress. The slow tears of old age trickled down Miss Susan's cheeks at the word that another of her generation had passed away. And then, with a quick transition, she began excited plans for attending the funeral, which involved a trip by boat to Portland and a long and arduous ride in a day coach. But the thought of all this, coupled with midsummer heat, did not daunt the little lady. She would go.

"But, at least, Miss Susan," urged the messenger, "you'll not take Miss Emily with you."

"And, my dear," said the lady to the woman, when she told her story over a cold lunch, "what do you suppose Miss Susan said? Seriously, in her slow drawl, she replied: 'Oh, I couldn't leave Emily behind. You see she has so little fun in her life.'"

Scraping the Ballot.

The woman who had charge of the voting machine placed in one of the downtown stores for use in the instruction of women first voters, met a number of unusual and amusing situations. A few days ago, a well-dressed woman who had all the appearances of being well informed on matters political, entered the section where instructions were being given, and after making the usual preliminary apologies, asked the young woman in charge to demonstrate the operation of the machine. She was shown what she should do in case she wished to vote a straight ticket, but this failed to satisfy her craving for instructions, and the climax was reached when she innocently requested: "And now would you mind showing me how I should work the machine if I wish to scrape my ballot?"

Furs All Her Fortune.

"Alaska produces a large variety of beautiful and valuable furs upon land," says Andrew J. Stone in the Century. "It has 12 varieties of bears, six species of fox, black, blue, cross, red, silver and white, and all common land furs. The skins of its foxes are of the highest quality and are larger than those produced in any other country. The Alaska moose is the largest land animal found on the western hemisphere. The moose is as choice as the best of beef and its skin makes excellent footwear and is much worn during the winter months. The caribou like to remain in the almost exclusively northern mooses, and inhabits only the northern parts of the continent. The caribou is a large animal and supplies men with hundreds of pounds of moose."
